H.R. 3251. An act to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins in commemoration of the Bicentennial of the U.S. Congress; and

H.R. 4776. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendments Nos. 1 through 17, 19 through 22, 24 through 27, 29 through 35, and 37 through 39, to the bill (H.R. 3251) "An act to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins in commemoration of the Bicentennial of the United States Congress."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 4776) "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, and for other purposes," and requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Harkin, Mr. Lautenberg, Mr. Reid, Mr. Stennis, Mr. Nickles, Mr. Grassley, and Mr. Hatfield to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1979. An act to establish the Grays Harbor National Wildlife Refuge.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize one Member under the 1-minute rule today. We will not have 1-minute speeches until the conclusion of our business except for the recognition of the gentleman from California [Mr. Dymally].

REV. W. JEROME FISHER

(Mr. DYMALLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to acknowledge that Rev. W. Jerome Fisher, pastor of Little Zion Missionary Baptist Church, from my district in Compton, CA, has offered the opening prayer during our opening session on today, Wednesday, July 13, 1988.

Following his tour of duty in the armed services, Reverend Fisher sang with and directed the junior and senior choirs at his father's church, the 103d Street Baptist Church in Los Angeles. He began his ministry in December 1955, was ordained by his father in 1956, he became the pastor of Little Zion Missionary Baptist Church in March 1957.

Under Reverend Fisher's leadership, Little Zion has grown from 13 original members to the present 6,000 members. The church purchased the site where the existing sanctuary stands now, and the edifice, land, and other buildings total over $1 million.

Some of Reverend Fisher's notable achievements are as follows: candidate for Compton City Council, 1967; Evangelist of the Year in 1970; received his doctor of divinity degree in 1970; Pauline Award for Evangelist of the Year in 1970; and served on the Century Freeway Affirmative Action Committee under Governors Jerry Brown and George Deukmejian.

Presently, Reverend Fisher is the moderator of the Faith District Association, an auxiliary of the Western Baptist State Convention of California, consisting of over 30 churches.

Reverend Fisher and wife Norma Jean are the proud parents of seven children.

I am pleased that Reverend Fisher has been accorded the honor of conducting the opening prayer, and I would appreciate your joining me in welcoming him to the U.S. House of Representatives.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON MONOPOLIES AND COMMERCIAL LAW OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO SIT TODAY DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law of the Committee on the Judiciary may be permitted to sit while the House is reading for amendment today under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Speaker, this has been cleared with the minority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF S. 2527, PLANT CLOSING NOTIFICATION ACT, AND H.R. 4848, OMNIBUS TRADE AND COMPETITIVENESS ACT OF 1988

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 491 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. Res. 491

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2527) to require advance notification of plant closings and mass layoffs, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment under the five-minute rule. No amendment to the bill shall be in order except an amendment, if offered by Representative Michel of Illinois, or his designee, and printed in the Congressional Record of July 12, 1988, said amendment shall be debatable for not to exceed one hour, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a Member opposed thereto, and shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, which may not include instructions.

Sec. 2. That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4848) to enhance the competitiveness of American industry, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the bill and against its consideration are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment under the five-minute rule. No amendment to the bill shall be in order. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, only if offered by Representative Michel of Illinois, which may contain instructions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] and pending that I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 491 provides for the consideration of S. 2527 which would require advance notification of plant closings and mass layoffs. It also provides for the consideration of H.R. 4848 the omnibus trade bill to improve American industrial competitiveness.

Under the rule, S. 2527, known as the plant closing bill shall be debated for 1 hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. Speaker, the only amendment in order under this rule is an amendment offered by Mr. MICHEL or his designee printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 12, 1988. This amendment is debatable for 1 hour equally divided and controlled by a proponent and a Member opposed to the amendment.

The Michel amendment is not amendable. The rule allows one motion to recommit without instructions.

Section 2 of House Resolution 491 allows for the consideration of H.R. 4848, the trade bill. All points of order against the bill and against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate on the bill shall not exceed 2 hours equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The bill is not amendable. The rule allows for one motion to recommit only if it is offered by Representative MICHEL and it may contain instructions.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this rule and the subsequent two pieces of legislation that will be considered under this rule. American workers have suffered long enough while this administration has allowed our Nation to lose its competitive edge in the world marketplace.

Our trade deficit for 1987 was another record high at $170 billion. Over 2 million Americans have lost their jobs due to unfair foreign competition. The big joke in this country is that jobs are now our No. 1 export.

While we have seen lower monthly trade deficits in the past few months, we must not be fooled into thinking the trade deficit is going to go away. It will persist so long as this administration continues its failed trade policies.

We desperately need a comprehensive trade bill to deal with a desperate situation.

Congress has labored for over 3 years crafting an omnibus trade bill. We worked with the administration in a good-faith effort to take care of their problems with the bill.

And now we've deleted the plant closing provision that the President himself wanted out of this bill. We sorely need this trade bill as part of a comprehensive trade strategy aimed at the future.

H.R. 4848 is identical to the conference report on H.R. 3, except it deletes the plant closing language; it deletes the Alaskan oil provisions that the House earlier dropped in the enrolling resolution for H.R. 3; and it adds a provision stating that the legislative history of H.R. 3 will be the authoritative legislative history of H.R. 4848.

With passage today, the House leadership will have done absolutely everything it could do to enact a trade bill. It is our genuine and fervent hope that the President will sign this monumental legislation and allow it to become law.

This trade bill strengthens laws protecting our Nation against unfair foreign trade practices; it beefs up worker retraining and education programs; it puts emphasis on foreign language, math, and science skills in our schools. These are important steps that must be taken to lay the groundwork for a bright future.

I supported the trade bill with the plant closing notification provision because I thought it was fair and that it was an appropriate measure for comprehensive legislation that emphasizes worker retraining and readjustment. Now, we have done what the President has asked. We should pass these two important pieces of legislation, both of which benefit American workers.

Recent polls show that 86 percent of the American people support the worker notification provisions. In 1987, the Department of Labor released statistics showing that in 2 out of 3 mass layoffs, workers received no general advance notice. In about half of the cases, employers did not give specific notice in advance to the employees who would be laid off.

In April, Walter Mossberg in the Wall Street Journal wrote:

> The plant-closings language is nothing more than a modest effort to make sure that a few companies inclined to do so don't hide their plans to close a plant until the last minute, leaving workers and communities in the lurch, is squarely in the tradition of such social reforms as the child labor and minimum wage laws.

According to GAO, blue-collar workers on the average get around 7 days' notice of a plant closing or permanent layoff.

White-collar workers get about 14 days' notice. Nonunion blue-collar workers get an average of 2 days' warning. For those who think most workers can see a plant closing or a layoff coming, the fact is that nearly half of today's displaced workers had absolutely no idea they were going to be laid off before it happened.

Mr. Speaker, the Office of Technology Assessment has found that worker productivity does not fall off after notification of a plant shutdown—in some cases, productivity increases.

Worker notification is the law in Canada, France, Germany, Japan, Great Britain, and Sweden. Taiwan requires advanced notice of all layoffs. Rather than losing export trade, Taiwan has increased its trade surplus with the United States every year of the Reagan administration.

If the President really wants a comprehensive trade bill, he will sign both of these bills into law and let us get on with wiping out the trade deficit, increasing our exports, and putting our workers back to work.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the plant closing bill and the trade bill are both major pieces of legislation and they should be considered under a fair and balanced procedure.

But fair procedure is not what this rule provides. First, with regard to the Plant Closing Notification Act, no amendments are permitted, except for one substitute. Even the motion to recommit is restricted so that it may not contain instructions.

Mr. Speaker, if the House had been given an opportunity to amend this bill at some point in the past such a restriction would not be so bad. But in the case of the plant closing bill, the House has never had an opportunity to consider amendments. The Senate, on the other hand, was allowed the freedom to consider amendments at great length. House Members will be denied an equal opportunity to have their ideas considered under this rule.

Yesterday, in the Rules Committee a number of Members appeared seeking an open rule so they could offer their proposals for improving this legislation. The allowance of one substitute will permit one set of ideas to be considered but the others will not.

For example, one Member appearing before the Rules Committee, who supports a plant closing notification bill, felt that an open rule would greatly enhance the chance of success. If the House were allowed to improve provisions in the bill which were overreaching and ambiguous, the odds of sending the President a bill he could sign would be greatly improved.

However, this rule is not designed to enable the House to reach a consensus position. This rule is a political maneuver designed to force the President to veto a flawed and ambiguous bill which has wide popular appeal.

It is not a coincidence that all of this comes to pass just before the National Democratic Convention.

I doubt that some of the speakers at the Democratic Convention will mention the vague language in the bill which will lead to years of litigation. But there will probably be rhetoric which attempts to paint those who are concerned that this bill will cost more jobs than it will save as being heartless.

Mr. Speaker, if the Democrats were seriously interested in developing a consensus on this legislation the House should be permitted to amend the plant closing bill, and it could be sent to conference to work out differences with the Senate.

But of course, if we followed the regular process then the political timing would not work out, and worse than that the chances of confrontation with the President might be diminished.

Mr. Speaker, there are some other strange features about this rule as well. Instead of having a separate rule for each of these two major pieces of legislation, we have only one rule providing for the consideration of the plant closing bill and the trade bill. It might have been easier for Members to vote against the undesirable features of this plant closing rule if it had stood on its own, but in combination with the rule on the trade bill it will be more difficult.

Mr. Speaker, we need to adhere to normal legislative procedures. Short cutting the regular processes may produce some short-term political gain, but in the long run it is not good for the country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule under which we are considering the Plant Closing Notification Act.

This legislation is far too important to turn on the limited options for debate available under a closed rule. Without having the benefit of the full amendatory process, we effectively defer to the Senate in crafting this landmark legislation. There is strong sentiment among those who find this bill overreaching and ambiguous, that they could support alternative provisions which provide a narrower, yet still vigorous mandate for notification.

Many of us have seen in our own districts the devastating impact of plant closings on workers and communities, so I do not believe the need for 60 days' notice can be disputed.

Having drafted a substitute, many of whose features were debated in the Senate, I remain concerned that we have lost the opportunity to fashion a plant closing bill that combines a mandate for notice with sensible provisions that succeed in correcting many of the weaknesses in the legislation that was contained in the trade bill.

However, I will take the time to enumerate what I see as serious policy problems and drafting faults in this bill that very well may come back to haunt us, or be left to the courts to rectify.

My substitute would have effectively eliminated part time workers from coverage under the act. Their inclusion as employees whose layoff would trigger notice places an onerous burden on employers.

The 33-percent employment loss threshold for notification contained in the Senate bill is unrealistically low. I would provide that layoffs are covered if they involve 60 percent or more workers. Further, a mere reduction in hours should be excluded from the notification trigger.

Closings or layoffs that indirectly result from a strike should be specifically exempted from the bill. What we will see are situations in which a strike or walk out at one plant will trigger layoffs and notice at another plant whose operations depend upon the functioning of the one with labor strife. This will create a domino effect that is poor public policy, and may undermine businesses which should otherwise survive.

In discussion, some of my distinguished colleagues raised issues I attempted to deal with in my substitute. Among them was language in the bill which permits an employee to voluntarily quit upon being given 60 days' notice, collect severance pay under a preexisting agreement with an employer, and collect an additional 60 days' pay. I would have treated this premature departure as a voluntary resignation not entitling the employee to further pay under the 60-day notice period.

In addition, the back pay remedy for an employer's failure to give a full 60 days' notice should be offset by an supplemental unemployment pay an employer agrees to provide.

But most importantly the "unforeseen business circumstances" exemption from the notification period must be specifically defined. Simple common sense requires that we mean what we say and we say what we mean as to what constitutes an unforeseeable business circumstance.

The Senate bill should be amended to require that unforeseen business circumstances include unforeseeable changes in price or cost, sudden loss of contract, a sudden and significant decline in customer orders, a fire, flood, drought, or act of God. The bill still leaves the question of what constitutes as unforeseeable business circumstance to one which will ultimately have to be decided by the courts. This invites litigation and will be a labor lawyers dream.

Under a closed rule, these concerns will not be addressed. The result, I fear, will be a rush to judgment on legislation that is not in the best interests of workers or businesses. In recent weeks, some businesses have asserted that in order to "get around" this bill they will post continuous notices of layoffs, and proceed with business as usual. The 33-percent loss threshold for triggering notification is so low that it invites the search for loopholes.

Those who want a mandate that will serve the best interests of workers and encourage compliance through careful drafting see an opportunity to improve the legislation slip away under a closed rule.

Under a closed rule we lose a chance to create a bill that will stand the test of time. We know that some businesses are just not good citizens. We are appalled that hard working men and women go to their place of employment only to see the doors bolted against them and their jobs vanished without warning. Simple human decency demands notification to American workers of the loss of their livelihood. Common sense requires that we act with all deliberation to fashion a bill that is both responsive and realistic.

Under a closed rule we are denied an opportunity to improve this legislation. Make no mistake about it, this opportunity is not merely denied to minority Members of this body; it is the American people who are deprived of their say in the final form this legislation will take.

Mr. Speaker, the consequences will be felt by working men and women throughout our country as the meaning and scope of this bill are decided by the courts in a piecemeal fashion that negates the goal this legislation was designed to serve.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote against this rule. This is a rare rule. Of course, the Committee on Rules has proven in the last couple of years to be very innovative, which is not totally unprecedented, but it is not the common occurrence around here to say the least.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I can think of only one other instance where we tried to tie two bills together in one rule, so it should not be done that way.

Second, it is a closed rule. We have one opportunity for substitutes on one bill, and we are given very graciously an opportunity to offer a motion to recommit with instructions on the other.

Now it is very curious to me that a motion to recommit with instructions is OK on one, but it is not on the other. The plant closing bill in its present form has not been considered by any committee in the House other than the Committee on Rules, and certainly the Committee on Rules does not have the expertise to look at the substance of that bill.

There was a specific request made to the Committee on Rules. In a bipartisan way the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] asked simply for an opportunity to knock out one section of the plant closing bill. But, no, they were told that one cannot get that opportunity.

These two bills should be separated and should be considered separately, and they should be open so the Members can work their will on the floor of the House of Representatives, so they should vote against the rule.

But on the substance, at long last we are going to get a trade bill. It is going to pass overwhelmingly. The President is going to sign it; that is good. We should have had it a long time ago, and, if we had not had extraneous matters tied to it, we would have already had it, and it would have been signed into law. But, no, we had to have these things like plant closing tied to the trade bill, and we should not have done that.

On the plant closing bill itself, it is not just plant closing. It is also layoffs. The Members need to remember that. It applies to situations where as few as 50 people are involved. It applies to a situation where savings and loans may be about to collapse and they are being told that they have got to keep the employees for 60 days. We will hear more about that from the gentleman from Ohio. We need to be aware of that.

Why are we doing this? Job levels are at an all time high. Unemployment is at a 14-year low. And yet we are hearing what is typical of what we get from this side with a negative approach. The Members know we have got a plant closing bill. Why are we not talking about incentives about plant openings? Why are we not looking at incentives to expand plants that we have and create new jobs and new openings?

Mr. Speaker, that is what we should be doing here today, is debating how we encourage plant openings instead of passing legislation that involves plant closings.

I urge the defeat of the rule, I urge defeat of the bill on plant closing, and we should pass the trade bill.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] for yielding me this time.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, our trade deficit keeps exploding. America's No. 1 export is not scrap iron and scrap paper. It is jobs, jobs that cost $12 an hour that we are losing. We are replacing them with $3, $3.35 per hour jobs, and the press is referring to that as real growth.

Who are we kidding here today? The truth is America won the great war supposedly, but Japan and Europe have won the peace.

Mr. Speaker, we still have no trade bill, no trade bill since 1981, since we have lost a record amount of jobs. The Constitution clearly states that Congress shall regulate commerce. I say today the only commerce we have regulated have been profits for Japan and Europe. And the records state it crystal clear.

Our trade deficit, as a matter of fact, makes Congress today look like a bunch of free-trading wimps, stone cold wimps that have forgotten the American worker and what America stands for. We have hidden behind all the smokescreens of free trade to be fair.

What did Japan do last December? The greatest protectionist nation in world history who has almost a $70 billion surplus in trade with America, they announced a $60 billion public works project, and they put a little piece of legislation on it that only Japanese companies can apply.

When one investigative reporter from America, a very good one, found out, he printed this story, and the Commerce Department said, "My God, could they do that to us now?"

The Pentagon says, "This doesn't seem real."

Do my colleagues know what the Japanese said? "Our job in Japan is to take care of the Japanese people."

Maybe the Members of Congress should do the same for America.

Now let us look at the facts. The facts cannot be deceived nor denied. Since 1981, when Ronald Reagan came in as President, an increase of trade for West Germany, increased 850 percent. England's increase was 420 percent. France's increase was 380 percent. Italy's increase, 330 percent. Taiwan, 260 percent.

And let us not forget Japan: 220 percent, and there is no relief in sight.

Now President Reagan vetoed the last trade bill because of his so-called plant closing notice. Now I really do not believe that. I believe he wants to continue on with his laissez-faire type of policies, and he would like to pass that mantel on to another Republican. There is no question. But let us just take a look at one fact, and I have got to give him credit for this. There have been so many people coming in and out of his Cabinet, maybe no one took the time to tell him that Japan and West Germany give their workers the courtesy of a plant closing notice.

In fact, maybe no one ever told the President or his Cabinet that Japan even gives their workers lifetime contracts. And, if their company folds, they will even buy out their future.

What do we give Americans? Here is the motto in America: $3.35 and bust. And it has just about happened.

I do not want to really hear anymore from everybody coming up here from districts extolling the virtues of high technology. I do not want to hear it. My area since the last 15 years, which lost 60,000 jobs, has been raped, and no one even offered us a can of rust proof paint, and I do not want to hear it today.

We need a trade bill. We need a plant closing notice. And Congress should be judged today on the votes that they record here. If the American people have any sense, they will look at these votes because my colleagues cannot separate them from this great national debt. Anyone who buys more than they sell goes bankrupt, and that is what we are doing, and we have aided and abetted this process.

In fact I see somebody out there sort of chuckling. It is a little bit funny. Not to American workers, but to foreign trading partners that are laughing at us all the way to the bank. They are going right to the bank with our policies, and about all we have to offer our American industry is a passport to go overseas. In fact, if they move overseas, we will give them tax deferrals on their income, and, if they take their profits and reinvestment overseas, we, my colleagues, would not even have them pay taxes to Uncle Sam.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] has expired.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the additional time.

Let me say that again. If a company in Youngstown, OH, moves to Mexico, opens up a plant and it produces a product that is bought only in America, which usually we are; we are the marketplace, we are the mall for the sales of the world; if they sell their product back in America and make a huge profit, but they take that profit and expand a plant in Mexico, Mr. Speaker, our tax policies are such that they would not even pay taxes to Uncle Sam.

Mr. Speaker, it is not Uncle Sam anymore. It is Uncle Sucker.

I do not know how long all of us are going to be here, but I do not want Youngstown, OH; Warren, OH, northwestern Pennsylvania—industrial centers of America—waking up in the morning, their workers with no place to go. And I am sick and tired of all this reason and rationale. Someone still has to produce a product, and the bottom line is that it is not being produced in America.

I say to everyone who is concerned about the American worker, who has had all the $3.35 they can live with, who has got nothing but promises that have not worked, "Let's do something."

And I will say this: "If we don't, ladies and gentleman, we will have a rice paddy on the East Lawn of the White House very shortly because that's where our policies are taking us."

I appreciate the time. Does anybody want to speak out? I have stated my piece.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Michel], our Republican leader.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this rule. Anticipating what the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Walker] might have wanted to ask the previous speaker I should make the observation that there is a great fallacy in the gentleman from Ohio's assumptions, with respect to the trade figures with Europe. Isn't it strange that all those figures can be so well debunked by the fact that in our country in the past 6 years, we have created 10 times more jobs than all of the European countries combined. Most of our trade with our trading partners has been good for our country. Generally speaking we've been the beneficiaries of the benefits of trading with those countries mentioned by my friend because we've put far more people to work producing for that export market.

Furthermore on the issue of plant closing itself there is nothing in that piece of legislation that makes us one bit more competitive as a country vis-a-vis our trading partners. Why should we attempt to ape some of our competitors on this issue when we have done so much better than they?

Mr. Speaker, I have been fascinated to read and hear about Mikhail Gorbachev's call for a presidential system of government with a real legislature for the Soviet Union. If he is interested, this body could surely offer some advice to him on how such a structure should be designed and how it should work. We could provide vivid, real life examples of good legislation and bad.

Now one example of bad legislation is this rule. This is an arbitrary rule which violates all the principles of good democratic government. It prohibits open debate. It ignores longstanding procedures. It deals with two totally nonrelated issues which are important enough that they deserve separate rules under separate consideration.

Mr. Speaker, it is on days like this that I wish I could just turn off the cameras, shut the door to this place, close the Gallery so the public would not see and hear the way we are attempting to legislate in this body. This is not a shining example of democracy in action. This is why the pollsters get such a bad reaction when they ask people what they think about the Congress.

And what is so bad? Well, first the rule makes in order two separate bills which are so dissimilar that they do not belong on the floor on the same day.

Second, the rule is restrictive. It does not allow even fundamental amendments.

□ 1200

Third, the rule does not just structure the debate, it arbitrarily legislates on its own.

Fourth, the rule severely restricts the time allowed to debate and discuss both of these issues.

Fifth, the process under which these bills are being considered is being dictated by forces outside this House, beyond the control of the Members of this House and beyond the control of the citizens we represent. This day belongs to the all-powerful lobbyists who surely must feel on days like this that they own this House, and a lot of people in this House as well.

Sixth, the legislation before us is here not because the good of the Nation requires it or the people are demanding it. The legislation is here to create an issue which can be exploited by the Democratic majority, particularly if, as I suspect, the President vetos the legislation.

And there you have it. We have an opportunity to demonstrate to Secretary Gorbachev and his fellow reformers how to legislatively make a silk purse from a sow's ear. All we have to do is vote "no" on this rule. It is simple.

Comrades, take out your cards and ready yourselves to vote "nyet." Give perestroika a chance. Give glasnost a go. The world is moving toward democracy. Let us move with it by voting down this rule and opening it up to free and open debate American style.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of people in this country who have not been a part of this boom that my fellow colleagues have talked about on the House floor. They have not been a part of this great burgeoning economic miracle that some people seem to think pervades America. These people have been thrown out of work without notice. They are having difficulty retraining. I have got 5,000 workers in Michigan whose trade readjustment benefits are running out this very week, and to suggest on this floor that the legislation that we are bringing to you today is not demanded by the people is not to face the realities and the facts of the polls that have been published over the last few weeks. Eight-six percent of the American people want plant-closing legislation. They know it is fair. They know it is just. They know it is the law in France and Great Britain, in Taiwan and most industrial countries throughout the world, and they think it is a scandal and a shame that this democracy does not have it.

For those who come to this floor and suggest that we should wait another month, another 3 months, another year, for plant-closing legislation, is to neglect the views of these people who have been thrown out of work without a day's notice.

I am not going to stand here and listen to this and take this anymore. We have had trade legislation for 3½ years processed in this body. It has had hearing after hearing in this body and in the other body. It has gone to the President.

It is time we do something. If you want us to be irresponsible, we can wait until we have a Democratic President and get a tougher trade bill, but we are trying to be responsible. We are trying to cooperate.

To suggest that we are delaying, to suggest that we are not being fair is inadequate and it is unjust.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fair rule and the American people are looking at the vote on this rule and they are looking at the vote on plant closing and they are going to be looking at the vote on the trade bill when we get to it later this afternoon. So if you want to compile a record that tells the American people that you do not care about the closing of their plants, you do not care about getting on with the training of math and science and things that will make us competitive, vote "no" on the rule. Vote "no" on plant closing. Vote "no" on the trade bill. We will take it to the American people this fall.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds just to state that the gentleman mentioned they had been at this for 3½ years. I just have to remind the gentleman that his party has controlled this House during the 3½ years and has had ample time and ample votes to bring it to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Wylie].

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I am sure that the gentleman who spoke earlier did not mean to say that if you want us to be irresponsible, just wait for a Democratic President. The gentleman might want to revise his remarks in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, this rule should be defeated so that we might have an opportunity to offer an amendment to exempt failing banks and failing thrifts.

Banks and savings and loans are entirely different from factories. They are entirely different from plants.

Whether or not you agree with the plant-closing concept is not the issue here. As many of you know, we have a very serious crisis affecting our savings and loan industry. Over the next few years, literally hundreds of thrifts will be closed or merged with other institutions in order to save the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Fund.

As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] mentioned earlier, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board has created a so-called Southwest Plan to do just that. The plan calls for reducing the number of branches in the Southwest in order to reduce saturation in the market and lower the cost of funds that thrifts are having to pay to attract depositors. This will necessarily mean some layoffs are going to occur.

I believe that if we do not specifically exempt financial institutions from this legislation, we could create a panic in the marketplace situation. Just imagine if the regulators have to give 60 days' notice that an institution is to be acquired or merged or closed, if depositors make a run on that institution the ensuring financial panic will completely drain the liquid assets of the institution and place the Federal insurance agencies under additional strain.

Last week I asked the Federal Home Loan Bank Board Chairman, Danny Wall, about this and he expressed his concern that failure to make an explicit exemption for regulator action is indeed a very serious problem.

The FDIC says that application of this plant closing to troubled banks would be disastrous.

The National Council of Savings Institutions says we need such an amendment.

The U.S. League of Savings Institutions says that we need such an amendment.

The American Bankers Association says we need such an amendment.

Advance notice is incompatible with banks and savings and loan closings, and the rule ought to allow this exemption.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge defeat of the rule.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. BRENNAN].

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the bill which requires companies to give advance notice of plant closings and mass layoffs.

What kind of a company, what kind of a person would keep that information from their own workers? Many of us have seen the devastation of a plant closing.

What kind of a company would refuse to give their own workers 60 days' notice and a humane chance to rearrange their lives, to try to find a new job, to try to find and make arrangements to pay their mortgage or to pay their rent?

As we know, executives give themselves very, very expensive golden parachutes. We in Congress give ourselves 60 days' notice between the November elections and the time we have to leave office.

American working men and women, many of whom live hand to mouth existences, deserve as much as that.

This plant closing provision is a responsible measure and I think it reflects the belief that working men and women are worthy of fair treatment.

In a nutshell, plant-closing legislation is a simple human dignity issue. In fact, we give all sorts of notice to those people who need it the least. Unless we pass plant closing, we are going to continue that inconsistency. Here we are going to be giving notice to people who need it the most to rearrange their lives. So again, it is a simple human dignity issue.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY].

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Michigan is absolutely right. If you want to see irresponsibility, just wait until they get a Democrat President; but if you want to see a little taste of it, then look at this rule. This brings back the old adage, "You don't watch two things being made, that is sausage and laws."

If you look at this rule that is being proposed, it is a sausage full of junk, because we are having shoved down our throats a double closed rule, having to take up two different bills at the same time.

The gentleman from Michigan talks about people who want this bill, 86 percent of the people want this bill. That may be true if you look at the way you ask the question. They want to be notified when they are laid off, but if they read this bill, they would not want this bill, because it is going to cost jobs.

Well, they say people in Europe have got this bill. We ought to have it. Yes; the same people in Europe who have inhibited job growth, inhibited economic growth, have these kinds of policies. Why, even the Soviet Union is getting rid of these kinds of policies because they know that they do not work.

Then we have the trade bill. We do not even have a chance to amend the trade bill. That, by the way, Mr. Speaker, has a brand new entitlement program in it that we will not have the opportunity to get out.

Now, I want that opportunity to rework the trade bill.

They did not even trust the committees with the trade bill because they did not even send it back through the committee system to give them another chance to look over what they had done and amend this bill. They do not want amendments to this bill. That is why they have crafted a rule like they have.

Talk about fairness, this is not fair. I have only been here a short period of time, but I have never seen a rule that has two separate bills with two separate anticompetitive measures in it being considered at the same time, and not only considered at the same time, but we cannot even amend them.

Vote "no" on the rule.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I just want to point out to my friend, the gentleman from Texas, that I do not have to pick Europe. You can pick any developed part of the world.

The gentleman complained about the European nations. Talk about Japan and talk about Taiwan, any developed part of the world has a more rational, humane, and realistic plant-closing provision than we do.

So do not give me this stuff about decaying Europe.

The other point I want to make to my friend, the gentleman from Texas, is that he is complaining that he does not have a chance to amend this rule. The President indicated that he would sign the trade bill. This is a bill that the President indicates that he wants; so do not complain to us that this does not provide you with the type of legislation that your leader, your Chief Executive wants.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman, first, are we supposed to be in lock step with our President on every issue, and there are many of them in the trade bill?

Second, could the gentleman tell me how many jobs have been created by all these countries that he is talking about in the last 8 years?

Mr. BONIOR. I can tell the gentleman that we have lost 2 million top manufacturing jobs.

Mr. DELAY. None of them have created as many jobs anywhere near, all of them combined, as the United States has created without these kinds of provisions.

Mr. BONIOR. Well, that figure I certainly would dispute and disagree with.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from Texas and others, I have listened to the debate. I am perplexed by the position expressed here in opposition to the rule.

The trade bill the President says he wants to sign, but then the gentleman says, well, we should not have to go in lock step with the President, and yet the reason so many people on the gentleman's side are going to vote "no" on plant closing is because they do not want to differ from your President. It just does not make any sense at all.

Let me give, if I might, my view as to what is involved here. It is not the trade bill. Most people want to vote for it. The President is going to sign it. It is going to become law. It is really a smoke screen to talk about the rule in that respect. It is the plant closing issue. That is what is involved here.

Many on the other side act on the defensive, not only because the American people say they want it, but why they want it. They want it because of an element of fairness—of fairness. I do not care how you phrase the question to the American people on plant notice, on plant closing notices, they are going to say that people in communities should be given notice before they are shut down and people in communities are shut out. That is the long and the short of it.

If I were on the other side, if one wants to talk politically, I would hope that the veto would be overridden so that the issues were placed behind us.

I come from an area where there have been plant closing, shop closings, not just large plants, and it does not matter whether people are Republicans or Democrats or what else. What they ask is this, and forget about other countries for a moment, let us talk about our country; our country. With the exceptions that are provided in this bill, should not plant owners and shop owners, and we are not only talking about huge industrial plants, but like the place that bottled 7-Up, as it so happens in my district, where people came to work one morning and they saw a sign "You are out of work," not a minute's notice, and several hundred people involved. It was not GM or Ford, but it was a big enough shop to have the decency to let people know that they were not going to be at work more than the morning of that day. All of the issues that the gentleman brings up he can strip them all away. These Members are on a defensive because there is an issue of equity, of fair play and Americans want it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The issue of fair play and equity on the House floor is whether a bill that has never seen a committee of the House or the Senate, that has never been amendable on the House floor, whether it should be amendable on the House floor so that Members can in the final analysis vote based on that.

It is a specific piece of legislation that has never been considered. Members should have the choice of whether to apply it to companies of 100 employees or 500 employees.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time to respond, I have been here every session, and I think we have talked about plant closings, and we have talked about this trade bill. No one can come to this floor and say there is anything new. The gentleman has had his chance in committee and on this floor on the plant-closing bill, on the trade bill. In the name of equity, the Members ought to vote "yes" on the rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I just want the gentleman to understand that the House has never had an opportunity to consider the specifics of this bill. The House has never had an opportunity to consider whether it ought to apply to an employer of 100 employees or whether it ought to apply to full-time employees only or to part-time employees as is in this bill. The House has never had the opportunity to consider whether it ought to apply to layoffs or only plant closings.

Massachusetts State law, for example, only applies to plant closings, and this bill applies to layoffs also.

Our objection to the rule is to allow at least a committee, if not the full House, to at least consider the specifics of the legislation and not legislate by politics or headlines or slogans. No committee in the House has ever considered this bill ever, ever, not once, and the whole House had never considered it.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, this institution, the House and the Senate, have been talking about plant closing for years, for years, and what happened was that this bill on plant closing was stripped back from a much more comprehensive bill that included not only notice nut negotiation. Let no one say that there has never been consideration of these issues on this floor. There has been.

The majority of the people in this House and in the Senate decided that they wanted a bill that was stripped down to notice on closing and on-layoff, and that is not only the vote within this House, it is the vote of the gentleman's Republican colleagues in the Senate. The gentleman is trying a rearguard action here for one simple reason, and that is that this is a good idea. The Republican President, by vetoing it, has placed the gentleman in an untenable position, and it is not an issue of discussion on the merits.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman think that the full House should have the opportunity to vote on whether this legislation should apply to layoffs as well as closings or just leave it? Should the House have the opportunity to vote on layoffs?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, we have worked on this bill for a decade. In the last session we worked on this bill in terms of notification and in terms of negotiation. This House, by an overwhelming vote, has worked its will, and there is only one issue, and that is whether we will get two-thirds or not.

Do not get up here and say there has never been any discussion of the merits, because there has been. We have had votes here.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I consume.

I would just like to answer the question of my friend, the gentleman from Texas. The minority will have the opportunity to offer a substitute which can include in their substitute anything the gentleman from Texas desires. They will have an opportunity to express their views, contrary to the views of the majority of the people of this country, if they wish, contrary to the 72 U.S. Senators who voted for this very piece of legislation recently. They will have that opportunity. Take layoffs out, lengthen the dates, do everything, anything they want.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman was on the Committee on Rules in the last session as well as this session. The Committee on Rules in the last session permitted the legislation to be brought up under an open rule and allowed the House to work its will. I would just ask the gentleman: What has changed? Why can it not be brought up under an open rule today and work its will? There are differences of opinion about size and layoff and severance pay and collective-bargaining agreements. Why did the gentleman want an open rule before and a closed rule now?

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I would suggest to my colleague from Texas, if he so desires, he can make those changes in the substitute, and we will have a vote on them.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, plant closing—that very phrase makes me sick; at a time when we ought to be discussing plant openings we are discussing plant closings, and we ought to be discussing plant picnics, plant reunions, plant expansion, and plant get-togethers, not plant closings. We are indulging in a self-fulfilling prophecy, a death wish, if you will.

There is not anything in this legislation that will cause one more bit of productivity or one more bit of competitiveness, yet the gentleman dwells on the worst that can happen—a plant closing.

If this rule could only be changed to allow us to discuss the ways and means that workers with management, workers with chambers of commerce, workers with other elements of the community, can get together to anticipate layoffs and loss of jobs, maybe we would have something to work on, but to talk about plant closing, that is abominable. Plant closing is a death wish. Plant closing is the last thing that we ought to be discussing. We ought to be discussing more job opportunities.

This bill will cost jobs in the long run, and even if it is in full implementation and it is triggered into action, when decisions have to be made as to layoffs, it will cost more jobs and more productivity, and this is the nub of it. Our workers are being fooled by this legislation with the feeling that their futures are going to be protected. Their futures are being shorted. Their futures are being given second-class treatment in a plant-closing legislation.

The phrase makes me sick.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, if the phrase makes the gentleman sick, I would hope that he would support the bill, because he is turning the whole thing upside down. What we are trying to do is prevent plant closings. What we are trying to do is allow people to get together with ESOP's and into community involvement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume so that I can finish my thought.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, one of the reasons that both of these bills are linked is because they are, indeed, explicably linked together for a reason. They have an effect on each other. The minority leader got up and suggested to us a little bit earlier that these are nonrelated issues. Nothing could be further from the truth.

When a plant closes, we have additional trade problems in this country, and if we can keep the plant there through employee stock option programs, through community involvement, the putting together of a program to keep the plant alive, that will, indeed, help the economy of this country and eventually our trade status if, indeed, those commodities are exported. They are related, and they have a significance together and a meaning together.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Missouri, my friend.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, the evidence points to the fact that notification preserves jobs, increases jobs, job opportunities.

The President of the United States after being urged by the subcommittee of this House on labor-management relations appointed a blue-ribbon committee, appointed the Secretary of Labor, Mr. William Brock, and a number of other prominent people to do a study on notification, and they came to the conclusion and issued a very good report stating that those who receive sufficient notification have a far better chance of getting a job than those who do not. Those who receive sufficient notification have a far better opportunity of being retrained for something else than those who do not. Also, that report was also in agreement with one conducted by the GAO for this Congress and two other independent studies, so this bill will help those who are seeking employment.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a no vote on this closed rule as it relates to plant closings and a no vote on the so-called plant closing notification bill. There is a lot wrong with this bill. What is wrong with this bill has never been debated on either the committee or on the House floor, in an amendable form.

Mr. Speaker, let me walk through some of the basic areas of this bill that the House should be given an opportunity to correct. First, this legislation at its most basic would prohibit a private employer from imposing a necessary, if difficult, partial layoff in order to save the jobs of the remaining employees. That is what is wrong with the bill at its most basic. Layoffs that occur as a result of a lost customer or a marked turnaround or a declining commodity price or a new competitor are not pleasant. They are difficult to do, but they remain a much better choice than closing the entire facility and giving notice to the entire facility.

Even though an employer gives notice, a partial layoff is a far better alternative, and this bill prohibits that partial layoff, in order to save the remaining jobs.

Second, the bill applies most of its negative aspects against small- and medium-sized businesses rather than large businesses. The bill covers all companies with a minimum of 100 employees even if those 100 employees are part time and the layoff is triggered at as few as 50 employees.

Third, the bill triggers notice for a small layoff even in a large plant. It requires notice if as few as 50 employees are laid off in one operating unit of a facility, no matter how many thousands of employees are at the facility.

Fourth, a provision of this bill provides that if a company loses a contract, even if that contract is with a Federal agency, that employer still has to continue their overhead as if they still had the contract, so current law allows a Federal agency to cancel a contract with no notice, but then this law would say that the employer has to continue his overhead for 60 days, and that would likely put him out of business.

Vote "no" on this bill. It will cost us jobs and drive jobs overseas.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HOLLOWAY].

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule on S. 2527.

I oppose this rule because it is not an open rule. Instead, it is another in a series of modified closed rules which offer only an opportunity for one amendment, not a realistic chance for discussion of differences of opinion among the 435 Members of the House of Representatives.

There is a real difference of opinion on this issue. It is very controversial, and we know it.

If an open rule had been granted, I would have offered an amendment to address what I believe to be the most pressing aspect of the issue, jobs lost to overseas competition. My amendment would have limited the scope of the bill to only mass layoffs or the plant closing, which occur because U.S. companies are shifting the lost jobs to foreign countries.

Let me say on this that I believe the 86 percent of the people who were polled in favor of plant-closing notification oppose companies going to foreign countries. When we see an AT&T leave Louisiana with 9,000 jobs to go to a foreign country, I think that is wrong. I think that we do need to have a bill to give people notice when we have one of our companies going to foreign countries.

I ask the Members to vote no and to give me an opportunity to offer this amendment.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1¾ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, let us describe this for exactly what it is. This is all pure politics. The gentleman from Michigan told us here a little bit ago in a very emotional speech that this is going to be used against the Republicans this fall. That is exactly what he has been saying all the way along.

The Democratic Congressional Committee has been kind enough to send around to all of us Republicans the polling data so that we would know particularly what this amendment meant in terms of politics.

Big labor and the special interest groups have made it very clear that this is their political vote of the season. I suppose that is the reason for the closed rule. The political decisions have been made and there is no need for the House to have any chance to work its will on these things. It is all pure politics anyway, vote up or down, do not give us a chance to even deal with the bill in a real way.

We had an interesting statement here a little while ago when the gentleman from Michigan told us if you want real responsibility, wait until we get a Democratic President, and I think that may be the real story here. We are going to have such irresponsible economic politics when we get a Democratic President in here that we are very likely to need a plant-closing bill. I would say to my colleagues that that may be exactly what we are having here, is a harbinger of that which is to come. We will need lots of plant closing legislation because what we are going to have is a lot of plant closings. Instead of creating jobs, instead of creating 15 million jobs, instead what we will be doing is closing plants and putting people out of work.

It seems to me it is high time here that what we deal with is the realities of this bill. This bill will lose jobs. The gentleman from Texas just a couple of minutes ago described how we are going to lose jobs under this bill.

For instance, if someone has a Federal contract and the Federal contract was down the tubes, that employer will have to keep people on for 60 days despite the fact that he has lost his contract. If that particular situation arises my colleagues can bet that that plant is going to close and those people are going to be out of work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Minnesota for his kindness. I just wanted to correct my remark with regard to the irresponsibility quote that I made with regard to the next President. I am sure my colleagues understand where I was coming from and what direction I was pointing.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, we have had in interesting debate. Much of it has not concentrated on the rule but rather on what are the ill effects of the rule, and they are the plant closing notification bill.

The rule, as has been stated, provides for the taking up of two bills in the House rather than one. It has been pointed out earlier that that is a very unusual procedure. We do not see it happen very much. We should never see it.

There is no reason why we could not have had two rules. There is no reason why we could not have had open rules either, except that the majority has decided to exercise its gag rule prerogative, which it can put into effect by a majority vote.

We have had three Members of the opposition, two gentlemen from Michigan and one from Ohio tell us that the reason that we had to have this gag rule is because they did not want to hear any more talk from Republicans about why this bill was deficient. That is, I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, a very strong evidence of the arrogance of power that is so pervasive in this House. Gag rule is surely not consistent with the democratic processes.

We are further told that the democratic processes cannot go forward, that debate must be restricted, and that amendments may not be offered, all because the bill deals with essential fairness. It seems to me that it is a very strange situation when we are told that to make something fair we are obliged to act unfairly. That causes one to wonder who picked the referee.

The resolution is an atrocity. It is gag rule of the worst kind. We should have a chance to amend the plant closing bill. We should vote no on the rule.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and in support of S. 2527. The American people want fair notice of mass layoffs and plant closings, and an overwhelming majority supports the provisions of this bill. The 60-day notice requirement of S. 2527 is a matter of common sense and simple decency. In the words of the New York Times, "It is an overdue act of social justice."

The House and Senate have debated this matter at length over the past 3 years, and no further debate is needed. The time has come to adopt this simple measure and move on to other business. The rule should be adopted.

Those who believe the rule should allow for amendments and a prolonged debate should remember that the House has considered this legislation twice already—when we defeated the motion to recommit and passed H.R. 3, and again when we voted to override the President's veto, which was premised on his opposition to the provisions in the bill.

The House has been deeply involved in the formulation of S. 2527, which is the result of an unusually complicated legislative process that began on February 18 of last year, when I introduced H.R. 1122. The Senate's companion bill, S. 538, which Senator METZENBAUM introduced on February 19, was first attached to the trade bill, conferenced with the House, and then separated again and reintroduced as S. 2527.

It may be suggested that the seven amendments agreed to in the Senate somehow make this a different bill than the bill the House has approved twice before. Technically, of course, that is true. But, in fact, most of the amendments were technical in nature, meant to clarify provisions of the bill that will operate no differently now that the amendments have been adopted. Most in fact, were meant to reassure the bill's opponents that improbable misreadings of the legislation by the judiciary would not take place. Double precautions have now been taken.

The House conferees on the advance notice provisions of H.R. 3 were almost as deeply involved in the negotiations over these seven amendments as if they had, indeed, been conferees on S. 2527. We helped rewrite several of Mr. HATCH's amendments before they were accepted by the Senate managers, Senator KENNEDY and Senator METZENBAUM, and we made clear the limits on what amendments would be acceptable to the House. Thus, no changes were made in the amount of notice, extent of coverage, or the nature of the events that will trigger the employer's duty to provide advance notice.

In short, the prerogatives of the House have been protected, and we are not accepting a new Senate bill without adequate deliberation. Every issue arising from S. 2527 has been defined and debated in the House before, at length.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 258, nays 155, not voting 18, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mrs. Boggs for, with Mr. Oxley against.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut, Mr. KONNYU, and Mr. QUILLEN changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent from the vote on rollcall No. 228, the resolution providing for consideration of S. 2527, the plant-closing bill, and H.R. 4848, the Trade bill. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

ELECTION OF MEMBER TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 496), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 496

Resolved, That the following Member be, and is hereby, elected to the following standing committee of the House of Representatives:

Committee on Public Works and Transportation, Lewis F. Payne, Jr.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BICENTENNIAL OF THE U.S. CONGRESS COMMEMORATIVE COIN ACT

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3251) to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins in commemoration of the Bicentennial of the U.S. Congress, with a Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 36, and concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 36.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 36 as follows:

Senate amendment to House amendment to Senate amendment numbered 36: At the end of said amendment, insert:

SEC. 11. SUNSET.

All provisions of this Act, other than section 10, shall be repealed on the day after the date of enactment of this Act, and no person shall be liable for not complying with such provisions (other than section 10) while they are in effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so in order to ask the chairman of the committee to explain the need for the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the request essentially is to concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendment which was extender of the FSLIC moratorium that prevents FSLIC-insured institutions from converting to FDIC insurance for an additional year beyond that which was included in the CEBA legislation adopted last year.

As this bill now reads, as the amendment now reads, that is all that is contained in the amendment. As a matter of fact, there is no coinage legislation whatsoever.

Mr. WYLIE. Further reserving the right to object, I want to make that point clear. It is my understanding now that there is nothing else in this amendment axcept the extension of the moratorium prohibiting thrifts from exiting from FSLIC, is that correct?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. WYLIE. Given the continuing difficulties facing FSLIC, I think it is clear that the moratorium should be extended for an additional year, and I urge quick passage.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARNARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I take this time to ask a question of the distinguished chairman. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman, is this moratorium a permanent moratorium or is it extending the moratorium for 1 year? What is it?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, this is a 1-year extension.

Mr. BARNARD. A 1-year moratorium? I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PLANT CLOSING NOTIFICATION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 491 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the Senate bill, S. 2527.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2527), to require advance notification of plant closings and mass layoffs, and for other purposes, with Mr. Glickman in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clay] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Jeffords] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clay].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, once again we are debating plant-closing legislation for what I truly hope will be the last time in this Congress. The bill we have before us does not go as far as I would like—but it is a vast improvement over the status quo, in which workers receive on an average less than a week's notice of layoffs and closings. When three quarters of those voting in the Senate favor any bill, it is clear that the legislative process has succeeded in producing a consensus.

In the past few months, the issue of notification has captured the attention of the American public. It has been analyzed and discussed in newspapers, on the airwaves, and in living rooms and pool rooms, beauty shops and barber shops. Polls show that 86 percent of the people believe this is modest and fundamentally fair legislation. It is a bill that has emerged from months of public scrutiny, with substantial support in every sector of the country and among workers in all economic categories.

For those of you who have opposed this legislation in the past, let me call to your attention some of the changes that have been incorporated in the bill to meet your concerns. The bill covers firms with more than 100 employees. Notice is not required if the layoff or closing is caused by unforeseeable circumstances. Notice of a closing is not required in certain situations where a business is faltering. The bill does not cover part-time or seasonal employees. The Senate has added clarifying amendments to protect against frivolous lawsuits, to assure that employers are not required to provide notice to economic strikers when they are permanently replaced and to assure that, if notice is not required when a closing or mass layoff is due to a natural disaster. Each of the provisions I have mentioned is a modification designed to address concerns expressed with the original bill.

Much has been said in previous debate about why giving notice of layoffs is nothing more than fundamental decency. Sixty days' notice can make a difference in the life of a worker, a family, a community. It is a basic protection that is afforded workers of nearly all industrialized nations. Working conditions in this country should be second to none.

Beyond basic decency, advance notice is good for economic stability. Four nonpartisan studies have found that notice makes worker training programs far more likely to succeed. These studies have shown that workers who get notice are far more likely to find appropriate training than workers who receive no notice. We are about to pass a trade bill which commits a billion dollars to retraining American workers. We're throwing good money after bad if we don't require notice of plant closing and mass layoffs.

We have come a long way on the plant closing bill. At last we have the chance to send to the President a bill that has broad bipartisan support, as well as editorial, and even significant business support. Let's once and for all put this issue behind us and send the President a bill that has such broad support that he will surely sign it into law.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to let the Members on this side of the aisle know what I have done. I have split the time, 20 minutes for the opponents and 10 minutes for the proponents, and it will be my purpose to allow a Member in opposition to close the debate.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Bartlett].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise strongly to urge a no vote on the bill. It is a bad bill. It is conceived only in politics. It is spoken of only in political terms.

The fact is that this legislation, if it were to be enacted into law, will cost American workers their jobs, because at its very basics, what this bill does is it prohibits a private employer from imposing a necessary partial layoff in order to save the jobs of the remaining employees.

We can dance around all the other issues, we will hear a lot of political talk here today, we will see a lot of headlines, and we will get a lot of pressure at home and see polls for the American public, but the fact is that if this bill is passed, it will prohibit an employer from providing a necessary, although difficult, layoff of some of his or her employees in order to save the jobs of other employees. The question before us is, should the Federal Government walk down the road of Western Europe and prohibit those jobs from staying here.

I would like to go through a bit of what is wrong with the bill, in addition to its basics. No. 1, the bill applies most of its negative aspects against small and medium sized businesses.

The coverage is triggered at 100 employees, even if those employees are part-time, as few as 20 hours a week.

No. 2, the bill triggers notice for a small layoff, even in a large plant. If as few as 50 employees are laid off in a larger facility in 1 operating unit, then coverage is triggered.

The bill permits a Federal agency to cancel a contract with no notice but then requires that contractor to give 60 days' notice and to continue their overhead for the next 60 days.

The bill mandates that any previously negotiated severance pay or other benefits be paid in addition to the notice requirements in this bill.

The bill is not limited to an actual closing, but as to any so-called employment loss involving as few as 50 employees in 1 operating unit, or any reduction of work hours of more than 50 percent.

The bill applies to part-time workers. The bill preempts State laws and privately negotiated collective bargaining contracts.

Other countries have tried to go down this road. I brought a chart which we are all familiar with showing the enormous increase in jobs in the American economy by in fact permitting companies and employers, private employers, to manage their operations, contrasting that with the creation of jobs in Japan and in the United Kingdom, which has been flat, and in Germany, which has similar laws, and which has in fact declined. The fact is that if we ask companies why they located in the United States or in other countries as opposed to Western Europe, they will tell us this is one of the major reasons why they followed that course.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI].

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Chairman, I rise to urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. Chairman, it is long overdue that we give American workers and their families the security that the plant closing bill offers.

This country was built on the sweat and blood of our workers and they deserve this protection.

Over the years American workers have not received adequate notice of plant closing and layoffs. Two million workers per year lose their jobs due to plant closings. On the average, nonunion blue collar workers receive only 2 days notice, 2 out of every 3 workers receive no notice.

Fairness is the basic question in this debate. Should we allow hard working Americans to be abused and financially devastated by their employers? Should we allow industrial communities to bear the social burdens of these dislocated workers? And should we close our eyes to the trauma and suffering these sudden layoffs have caused? I believe my colleagues are more enlighted than that.

Advance notification of plant closings is right. It is right on the grounds of fairness to workers and the communities. It is good policy and many studies have shown it will work.

The National Academy of Sciences states that "advance notice of permanent plant shutdowns offers significant benefits to workers who are displaced and to the Nation by reducing the average duration of unemployment and lessening the public costs of such unemployment."

According to the Office of Technology Assessment, "The best time to start a project for displaced workers is before the plant closes or mass layoffs begin; advance notice makes early action possible. * * *"

Countries such as Canada, Sweden, and Great Britain have all implemented advance notification statues with no negative affect to their business communities.

Most importantly, the American people support this bill. In a recent survey, 79 percent of all Americans favor requiring 60 days' notice to employees before a plant is shut down.

Advance notice of plant closings is a matter of simple justice. American workers and American communities suffer from a lack of such a provision and will continue to suffer in health, dignity, and financial security unless we take action today to enact this fair, efficient, and long overdue legislation.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MARTINEZ].

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of S. 2527, the plant notification bill. I say that because earlier we heard that some of our colleagues have problems with the term "plant closing" and I do, too. The problem is "a rose by any other name is still a rose." This is not a plant closing bill, it is a plant notification bill. I imagine if we called it "peace keeper" or "freedom fighter" instead of saying it is for workers, we would gain support. The truth is that as old as the cliche is, and it still holds true today, "Don't confuse me with the facts, my mind is made up." So as quickly as they can, the opponents jump up and cry foul, job loss and interference with the free enterprise system. And just as quickly the supporters rise to claim the opposite. We all create facts from the information we have, good, bad or indifferent. Well I see this as plant notification. Reasonable plant notification. Not political maneuvering, but an attempt to give workers a warning to prepare communities and workers to do whatever they can to save the plant and, failing that, move to find jobs for the dislocated workers and find revenues to supplant those lost. Sixty days isn't that great a hardship on anyone if we had the determination to protect plants and workers. We could have enacted a program such as in Canada where they provide an arbitrator and set up a counseling group to relocate workers, to retain workers, and to provide counseling. It works there and it can work here. Be that as it may, what we have here is simply a plant notification bill that's fair. Let's put the people first and pass it.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make this inquiry of the gentleman from Vermont? The gentleman did not ask unanimous consent to divide his time; he is doing that himself, is that correct?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am doing that myself. We are so friendly on this side, Mr. Chairman, that I have no problem in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appreciates that.

The gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, having had every opportunity to correct the weaknesses in the Senate bill foreclosed by a closed rule, it is with reservations that I rise in support of that same bill on final passage.

However, in all honesty I must assert that the need for a plant closing notification mandate supersedes my strong reservations about specific requirements of the bill.

No longer will working men and women arrive at their place of employment to find the doors bolted against them and their jobs vanished without warning. Passage of this bill will achieve this most important goal of notification and will put us on the road to labor policies that establish fairness for workers.

Although some of the provisions of this bill may be left to the courts to rectify, there is a victory to be had here in terms of working the will of the American people—and they clearly want a plant closing notification measure to come out of this Congress.

In addition, experience both here and abroad have clearly demonstrated the benefits for retraining and relocation of early notification. The Brock Task Force Report established this as recommended policy.

I must qualify my support of the bill with a reminder to my colleagues that we could have done better by the American worker and business by eliminating ambiguities in this bill and encouraging compliance by providing greater flexibility for unforeseen business circumstances.

Nevertheless, I will vote for this notification bill because it establishes a humane principle in law and sets a minimum standard of decency for American workers.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

Clay] for his advocacy and support of this measure, and I do join him in hoping that this is the last time we must address the issue on the House floor this year.

When a decision is made for a plant to close or for mass layoffs to take place, the decision is made by corporate executives far in advance of the actual closing, and I think it only fair and fitting that the employees of that plant, both management and those who receive wages, be given at least a 60-day notice that their lives will be critically changed. Whether it is for the good or better of the company that does it, it is for an economic reason, and for that very same economic reason, the employees of that firm should be entitled to readjust or prepare to readjust their economic lives.

Also, the budgets of the communities in which those plants are located must be prepared by the community leaders far in advance of the beginning of a year, and they must know what their tax base is. They must know whether they will have taxes from wages coming in from the plant, and also they have real estate taxes. It is only fair that the community likewise receive some advance notice, and certainly a 60-day advance notice is not asking too much.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Gunderson].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think as we consider S. 2527 this afternoon, it is important that we understand we are beginning this debate at a time of record job creation in this country and at a time of record startups of new businesses. In light of these positive economic conditions we have to ask ourselves, why are we here in the first place? But even with these encouraging trends, our Nation is experiencing worker dislocation and this gets us back to the basic question before us, and this is whether some form of worker notification is right or wrong in the case of mass layoffs and plant closings.

Frankly, I support the concept of notification, but I think the legislation before us lacks significantly, in that requiring employers to provide notice is all it does. We have to ask ourselves the question: What is the role of Government in terms of a changing economy, in terms of changing jobs in a changing world?

Those who are suggesting we need to so aggressively bring this issue up and debate it on its own would seem to say that Government's role is simply to regulate the affairs of business—telling employers when they can or cannot operate and when they can close and when they cannot close. I would suggest that Government's role ought to be far more constructive, and it ought to be far more positive.

What we ought to be doing today is focusing not just on notification alone, but on providing reasonable notice as a part of an aggressive, comprehensive, training and retraining proposal. That is the only way we can justify this employer mandate. Notice by itself, without the retraining provisions contained in the Worker Adjustment Program of the trade bill; let us be blunt about it, is pure politics.

The second concern I have with regard to this legislation before us is that we have basically mandated through the rule that no amendments can be offered to try to improve the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation before us, on its face, seems very straightforward, like the only "right thing to do." Who could be opposed to providing workers with a 60-day notice that they will be losing their jobs? Therefore the bill's proponents and even the news media have portrayed this legislation as a simple, one-sided moral issue. Unfortunately, the mandates provided for under this legislation are much more complicated than this. Everyone in this Chamber supports the provision of adequate notice to workers who are losing their jobs. And I might add that everyone in the Reagan administration supports the provision of notice to workers as well. However where people differ in opinion is in determining what the proper role of the Federal Government should be in requiring this notification.

At issue are the key questions:

First, is it the proper role of the Federal Government to require worker prenotification of impending layoffs and closings?

Second, and if so, what should this policy be—in order that we do not actually tie the hands of business in a way that is counterproductive—that has the potential to backfire and result in eliminating the very jobs we want to save?

I would be remiss if I did not say that I am very frustrated by the way this very emotional issue has been politicized. Those Members of Congress and of this administration who are opposed to S. 2527 are not hardheartedly opposed to notice. While many of the concerns held by the business community were worked out through good faith negotiations during the earlier trade conference of which I was a party.

There continue to be legitimate concerns held by employers over the notice requirements under this bill.

For example, while several provisions are included in the bill that take into account special circumstances whereby employers would be unable to provide notice:

Such as where an employer is actively seeking capital or business in order to remain open; or

Where an employer is confronted with unforeseeable business circumstances; there still exists legitimate concern that the burden of proof lies with the employer to prove that these circumstances indeed exist and were reason enough not to have provided the full 60-day notice. As a result, concern over increased litigation is real.

Further there is the question on whether this should be strictly a plant closing bill or whether it should also require notice for mass layoffs as well. During the Senate's debate on this bill, many Members of that body went on record as saying that they would support a plant closing bill—but that this legislation goes beyond closings requiring notice for layoffs where one-third of an employer's workforce—if equaling 50 or more employees—will be laid off.

And finally there is the very important and often overlooked question of determining how far the Federal Government should go in telling employers how to run their businesses.

Where should this line be drawn in order to allow business to remain competitive in this evermore competitive international marketplace?

A very important fact I want to point out today is that it was this administration—through the leadership of former Secretary of Labor William Brock—who called together the Task Force on Economic Adjustment and Worker Dislocation which lead the way to development of a $980 million Worker Adjustment Program that will significantly improve our ability to retrain and assist these very workers who are losing their jobs.

It was this administration who lead the way in development of this $980 million program which is contained in the trade bill awaiting our action. We must recognize here today that the positive outcomes for workers that will result from this new program will far outweigh the provision of mandatory 60-day notice.

Where do I stand then on this issue? While certainly not perfect, I do feel that this legislation will benefit those workers who would have otherwise not received notice of an impending layoff or closing. And, as I mentioned before, many of the problems that would have been encountered by businesses were addressed during our conference with the Senate. Unfortunately, according to a study recently published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics—Wisconsin and Texas currently lead the Nation in worker dislocation due to mass layoffs and plant closings. In fact together our two States experienced one-fourth of all such job loss found in the 1987 study. In the last three quarters of 1987—Wisconsin experienced an estimated 30,651 job separations through mass layoffs and plant closings alone. And in the first quarter of this year, experienced 8,341 separations. In my district alone, in one eight-county region we currently have 5,837 dislocated workers who would qualify for our Dislocated Worker Program—and while not all have lost jobs through mass layoffs or plant closings, this gives a picture of what we are facing.

So, while I share the view that worker notice should be a voluntary effort on the part of employers, and while I do continue to hold concerns over certain aspects of this particular legislation, in my position as a representative of the working men and women of the Third District of Wisconsin who have been hard hit by worker dislocation,

I feel a responsibility to support this bill.

Therefore, I will support final passage of this legislation, but at the same time I do so reluctantly. I do agree that workers should receive adequate notice; and I do feel that employers have a moral obligation to their workers and to the communities in which they operate. I am reluctant to support this particular bill, however, due to the way that it has been misused politically, and because as I stated earlier, it will only be truly beneficial to workers if combined with proper training and worker assistance support as provided for in the newly restructured Worker Adjustment Program contained in both the House and Senate trade bills. The economic and employment policies of this administration that have lead to the creation of over 16 million new jobs, to single-digit inflation, and to the lowest unemployment rates we have seen in many years—in combination with initiatives such as the Worker Adjustment Program will do much more to solve the problems of America's workers than will this legislation on its own.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. Bosco].

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of S. 2527, the Plant Closing Notification Act.

I don't know how many Members have read the President's veto message on plant closing notification, but it does evoke sympathy for the captains of industry who the President says shouldn't be straitjacketed by these new regulations. They must be free to be "agile and responsive," says the President.

The President doesn't mention how the factory worker can be agile and responsive in paying a home mortgage, sending the kids to school, paying medical bills and so forth upon losing his job without notice. Yes, that does take agility.

The captains of industry who the President wants agile and responsive have responded with agility to their own plight.

The chairman of Bendix landed with great agility with a $4 million golden parachute when he lost his job in 1983. The chairman of Revlon didn't need 60 days advance notice when he took home severance pay of $35 million in 1985. Imagine the agility of RCA's CEO who ran all the way to the bank with the $2.3 million pink slip he got. Any factory worker would be responsive to the $12.6 million that the chief of St. Regis parachuted away with.

Mr. President, the people at the top aren't the ones in need of agility and responsiveness—its the workers who need to keep their lives and families together who really need our responsiveness today, and I hope that's just what we're going to give them.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes and 30 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL].

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Chairman, there is an old New York case which states that no one's life, liberty, or property is safe so long as the Congress is in session. That case is very appropo to S. 2527, which takes away basic liberties of employers to the detriment of American competition and to the very workers it purports to help. The only thing attractive about this bill is its purposefully misleading name—the "plant closing bill."

The primary issue this legislation involves not notice of "plant closing," but notice of "employment losses," that is notices of terminations, layoffs, or reduction of working hours. The issue is whether employers will continue to have the right to discharge, lay off, or even reduce working hours of their employees when the myriad exigencies of their business require it.

In this bill, "Plant closing" is defined in terms of at least 50 terminations, layoffs, or reductions in working hours of full-time employees over any 90-day period resulting from a "permanent or temporary shutdown" of: First, a "single site of employment"; or second, one or more (i) "facilities" or (ii) "operating units" within an employment site.

In addition, the "employment losses" which trigger the advance notice requirement do not have to occur all at once. When the number of "employment losses" aggregate to the threshold of 50 or more, over any 90-day period, all of the 49 pevious employment losses, until then legal, suddenly become retroactively illegal. All other employment losses, over and above the threshold, occurring within the same 90-day period, of course, are also deemed illegal.

The same holds true for what is defined in the bill as a "mass layoff." A "mass layoff" is defined as a "reduction in force." A "Reduction in force," in turn, is defined in terms of an "employment loss," in this instance being a threshold of not more than 500 or 33 percent of the employees (but not less than 50 enployees) over any 90-day period, but requiring not more than 500 and at least 50 employment losses. Once the threshold number of employment losses is reached within any 90-day period, then all employment losses occurring within that period, either before or after the threshold is reached, are deemed illegal, retroactively or not.

Each time the employer fails to send a proper 60-day advance notice or notices (within any 90-day period), the employer must pay each affected employee who suffers an employment loss back pay and benefits. The employer also must pay up to $500 per day for each failure to give proper notice of an employment loss to the unit of local government within which the employment losses take place. Presumably, the employee who has sustained an invalid employment loss, still holds a valid employment contract. If so, the employer would be obligated to issue a valid notice of employment loss to all such employees and pay further salaries until a new 60-day period expires.

There is no definition of what constitutes either a "permanent" or "temporary" shutdown, or of a "single site of employment" or of one or more "facilities" or "operating units" within a single site of employment. What factors would differentiate a "facility" or an "operating unit" from the rest of an employment site?

If an employer's operations consist of several buildings in a campus-like setting, would the layoff beyond the threshold of 50 tolerated employment losses within one of the buildings be a "shutdown of a single site of employment," or of a "facility" or "operating unit" within a single site of employment, hence classified as a "plant closing"? Or would it be a "reduction in force" with a different threshold tolerance of employment losses and therefore classified as a "mass layoff"? Would it matter whether the employees who were laid off performed the same or different services from the employees in the other buildings in determining what constitutes "operating units" or would the critical factor be the separate buildings?

Advance notification also imposes unreasonable long-term forecasting requirement on employers. For instance, an employer must project not only how many layoffs or reduced working hours may be required from time to time in order to stay within the threshold allowance granted, but also whether a layoff or reduction in hours will last for more than 6 months! If a layoff turns out to be longer than 6 months, it must be counted as an "employment loss" and could place the employer in retroactive violation of the threshold tolerance of 50 "employment losses" within any 90-day period. Firms will be required to maintain impossible business records to ensure that they do not retroactively violate the terms of advance notices. And the threshold tolerance depends on whether the employment loss is defined to have taken place at a "single site of employment" or at one or more "facilities" or "employment units" within a site of employment, or alternatively, is defined as a general "reduction in force".

The message seems clear. To be safe, employers should give the notice and wait 60 days before effecting any "employment losses", lest the employment losses aggregate beyond a threshold tolerated under this act. It is a goal long sought after by organized labor in order to keep its fading membership.

A competitive America must give businesses flexibility in making decisions about employee terminations, layoffs, and reduction of working hours. This point was made clear to me in a letter I received a few months ago from the Caterpillar Co. In that letter, Caterpillar representatives state:

> In the early 1980's, Caterpillar was forced to respond quickly and decisively to a more competitive international economy. Part of our necessary response included indefinite layoffs and 1- and 2-week shutdowns of all or part of plant operations. These actions often had to be assessed on a weekly basis. We didn't have the luxury then—nor do we now—of knowing with certainty what business conditions would be like 60 days in the future.
> Caterpillar—leaner and more competitive today—is stronger because of the flexibility we were able to exercise during tough times. If we had been hobbled by restrictive and delaying notice requirements, we might not have been successful in meeting foreign competition.

Anyone who has been in business knows that the ability to discharge and lay off workers, or to reduce working hours, has to remain within the discretion of the employer. Caterpillar is a viable company today because it had the discretion to make the difficult business decisions without government interference.

It is amazing to me how this Congress continues to mandate "benefits" for employees and seems intent on throwing a monkey wrench into the greatest employee benefit program of all, which has come not from Congress with its astronomical budget deficits, but from the free enterprise sector. The free enterprise system has given us 68 months of continuous GNP growth, 16.8 million new jobs since 1982, and 1.5 million new jobs in the first 5 months of this year alone.

In addition, since 1982, our Nation created nearly 2.5 times as many jobs as Canada, Japan, West Germany, France, England, and Italy combined. The United States employs a world-record 62.3 percent of its adult population. Our 5.3 percent unemployment rate is the lowest since 1972.

When Europeans tell you that their economies cannot grow any faster because of structural problems and rigidities, what they chiefly mean is that laws and union agreements make its prohibitively expensive to close inefficient plants, order necessary layoffs, or even fire malingerers. Since its 1972 "plant closing" law was passed, West Germany actually lost 1 million jobs while the United States created 33 million of them.

Nevertheless, Congress seems to want the European system. As I said, no one's life, liberty, or property is safe so long as the Congress is in session.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Ford] for the purpose of a colloquy.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to verify my understanding of two of the amendments to S. 2527 that the Senate adopted.

The first concerns the availability of attorney's fees under section 5(a)(6) to a business which is sued under this act and which prevails in the suit. Is it your understanding that the case of Christianburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412 (1978), controls the award of fees to a defendant business under the WARN Act?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Yes, that is our intent. Although rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure also permits the award of attorney's fees against a party that files a frivolous action, we want to make it explicit within the terms of this act that such sanctions under section 5(a)(6) are available when, but only when, in the words of Christianburg Garment, "a court finds that his claim was frivolous, unreasonable, or groundless, or that the plaintiff continued to litigate after it clearly became so."

Mr. JEFFORDS. If the gentleman would yield, I would also like to verify the managers' understanding of Senator Hatch's amendment to section 8 of the bill, relating to the mailing of notice. Is it your understanding that section 8(b) simply makes explicit one method an employer may use to give nonunion employees notice of an impending plant closing or mass layoff?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Yes, that is our intent. This amendment is in no way intended to legitimize such practices as giving ticketed notice—where notice is preprinted on the paycheck or inserted into each pay envelope—or any form of rolling notice, given regardless of whether a plant closing or mass layoff is actually impending. They cannot be considered good faith compliance with this act.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another colloquy?

Mr. CLAY. I yield to the gentlewoman from Connecticut.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, in understanding section 3(d), determinations with respect to employment loss, is it correct to assume that the reference to 2(a)(2) means that if the aggregate number of employees laid off over 90 days is more than 50, then the plant closing provisions could be triggered, but only if those layoffs are associated with a site or operating unit shut-down, as required under 2(a)(2) in its entirety?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. The gentlewoman is correct.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Schuette].

Mr. SCHUETTE. The issue here, Mr. Chairman, is not notice. Nobody, I repeat nobody, should get up in the morning, go to work and find a sign on the plant gate saying, "Business closed." That should not happen.

Businesses in my opinion have a responsibility to provide notice. Responsible businesses should. More should do that because we need to do all we can to ease the hardship when a layoff occurs or a closure occurs in the community. We need to do that. Businesses need to be encouraged to do that more.

So from my standpoint, the issue is how we can define that. It should not be mandated, in my opinion, nor inflexible, nor rigid. I view this issue as one of the great intentions, and I have great respect for those who have a different opinion on this issue, but I think good intentions will go bad because as a result we still stop job production in America.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the European economies are models for us to follow. We should not copy them. We built 17 million jobs in this country while the European economy is stagnant, flat. We all want notice, but we want a notice of job growth in the future. We do not want to provide working men and women in this country a notice of no job in the future. We want fairness, but this country needs growth.

Mr. Speaker, we do not want to choke economic growth off in the future. Frankly, big business does not have a dog in this fight. Most of their contracts are collectively bargained, and they have worked this out as they should.

Closing should be a negotiated item. Small businesses to an extent are exempt. It is the small and medium businesses who will lose out on this, and job growth as a result, because they have no PAC, they have no Washington representative, and they are too busy building jobs keeping this country growing.

So, as a result of good intentions, under the cloak of notice we will try to straitjacket American job growth in the future and choke off economic growth in the years to come.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DeLay].

Mr. DeLAY. Mr. Chairman, I think all the arguments have really been laid out. They were laid out a couple of years ago when we soundly defeated this bill on the floor of this House, and they have been laid out many times this year alone, but let me just point out and make a point that was made so eloquently by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Bonior] during the debate on the rule.

Mr. Chairman, he says we are not trying to give notification. We are trying to keep plants open because through, quote, community development, ESOP's and plant closings we keep the plants open. That is exactly the bottom line to this piece of legislation, my colleagues. That is full employment for lawyers and the membership drive for unions because what will happen is litigation will happen, and we will be forced to keep plants that should be closed opened as we have under ERIS, under ESOP's and many other pieces of legislation that come from this body.

Mr. Chairman, we are keeping plants open that should be closed, and what is the result of that? The result of that is that those plants that are efficient operations that are in that industry are made to suffer by keeping a business opened that should have closed, so in essence we are going to cost not only jobs, but competitiveness in this country.

Mr. Chairman, we ought to be opening plants. We ought to have the freedom to close if we have to. Make those decisions. Because keeping an inefficient operation opened only hurts those efficient companies and those great workers that are doing a great job.

So my warning goes to those companies that support this legislation. Do not come to this Member and say, "I am tired of being tied up in the courts because of liability problems or others," because they are going to get another dose with this piece of legislation. And do not come to me as a worker and say, "We're being unfairly competed with by a company that should not be in business," because this is going to keep them open, and this does not keep them competitive in America.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume for purposes of a colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, with the exception of some minor clarifying amendments adopted by the Senate, the bill we have before us today is the same bill that Congress adopted as part of the trade bill. The conference report on the trade bill provided important background and guidance as to the meaning and intent of Congress in adopting this legislation. I believe that the parts of the trade bill conference report relating to the plant-closing bill are an important source of information that will facilitate compliance with the law.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I completely agree with my colleague and believe the relevant portions of the trade bill conference report are most helpful in indicating congressional intent concerning this legislation. It will also provide guidance to employers regarding compliance with act. I therefore would join you in asking unanimous consent that pages 1045 to 1055 of the conference report on the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, which are the portions of the report pertaining to the plant-closing provisions, be included in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I would also like to ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee a question about the intent behind section 3(b)(2)(B). This was a provision adopted in the other body which provides that notice would not be required in certain instances of natural disaster. My first question is whether that subsection should be read in conjunction with section 3(b)(3), which requires that an employer provide as much notice as is practicable when the exceptions in section 3(b) apply?

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, yes, it should. If the actual cause of the plant closing or mass layoff is a natural disaster such as the current drought, the bill provides that, while the unforeseeability of that disaster may preclude providing the full 60-day notice period, the employer is still obligated to give as much notice as is practicable up to the full 60-day period.

Mr. JEFFORDS. That is my understanding. So, in other words, if on July 1 an earthquake causes an employer to immediately suffer a reduction in supply or business causing an immediate need to reduce employment, that employer would only have to give whatever notice he could before the employment reduction. That notice period could be as short as 1 day or 1 week. If, on the other hand, that July 1 earthquake has a long-term effect so that the employer won't have to reduce employment for, say, another 6 months, and that reduction is reasonably foreseeable at least 60 days in advance, that employer would still have to provide 60 days' notice, assuming all of the other conditions of the legislation are met.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, that is correct. That is certainly the intent of this legislation.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I would agree that that is the intent and I believe that is also what the bill clearly provides. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS].

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a brief colloquy with the gentleman from Missouri on the practical application of the provision regarding reduction of notice period. It is my understanding that the bill reduces the advance-notice period for a plant closing due to circumstances that could not reasonably have been foreseen at the time notice would have been required and for faltering companies that are actively seeking capital or business to avoid a shutdown, when the employer believes reasonably and in good faith that notice would preclude obtaining the capital or business.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is correct—that is the intent of the committee.

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Chairman, is it the intent of your committee that employers who find that they truly have to resort to the provisions regarding reduction of notice should be able to do so without fear of being second-guessed afterward? That is, that the prescribed advance notice be given whenever it is practicable to do so, but, that we should be aware of, and take into consideration, the real world realities that employers face that may preclude giving the full 60-day notice.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman is correct. The bill provides exceptions to the notice requirement for the very reason that it will not always be possible to give as much advance notice as the bill otherwise requires. For example, if a principal customer of the employer suddenly and unexpectedly terminates a contract, forcing that plant to close, that employer would be excused accordingly from the full notice period of the bill.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, we are told that the plant-closing notification is a very popular bill and the public supports it. That may be true, although a recent poll in the National Journal indicated that it may be a little less popular than some of its strongest supporters believe it is.

Whether it is popular or not, this is not an issue of burning intensity in the United States. It is not an issue that floods our mailboxes or our telephones or is raised very frequently in town meetings.

As a matter of fact, it is an in-house issue which is being raised to satisfy a very important interest group, that is, big labor. Labor is a very strong lobbyist within this body and across to the other side of the Capitol.

As has been pointed out, plant-closing notification probably will result in closing more plants. I doubt that is what the authors intend, and I know that it is not what we should be concentrating on. We should be looking for ways to open plants and to expand plants, not focusing our attention exclusively on the pessimism of plant closing.

It has been pointed out that plant layoffs are not predictable. We have talked about what happens in the case of emergencies, of earthquakes.

I would like to submit that any kind of a layoff or plant closing is an emergency. Seldom are they predictable. While the committee may intend one thing or another, or even may assure itself in colloquys on the floor of this House, all our talk does not insure that the smaller employer is not going to get sued under this bill. He may be obliged to prove in court what is an emergency and what is not.

Notice is a labor privilege that ought to be bargained for. Labor has not seen fit to bargain very hard for it. Notification belongs in the private sector, not in the legislative arena.

We should defeat this bill. I shall vote against the plant-closing notification.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time.

Mr. Chairman, back in 1985 then Secretary of Labor William Brock, a good Secretary of Labor, looking at America's difficult economic climate and recognizing that new technology and foreign and domestic competition, changes in demand, mergers, and acquisitions, had caused workers in America to face very serious problems, formed a task force which in December 1986 adopted this volume, entitled "Economic Adjustment And Worker Dislocation in a Competitive Society."

The chairman of that group was the director of the Labor-Management Institute at George Washington University. The task force had members on it from business as well as representatives of workers.

The businesses included General Electric, Johnson and Johnson, Titronics, and the representatives of workers included the United Food and Commercial Workers representative and the textile workers representative and others. There were legislators and a Governor and academicians and economic research experts on this task force, and this administration developed this booklet. It has very complete findings and recommendations and conclusions in it. Let me read you one of the conclusions:

> Experience has shown that the earliest notification possible leads to a more effective delivery of public and private services to dislocated workers. Delivery of public services to affected workers should begin well before shutdown or layoff, if possible.

The task force from this adminstration in this well-buried document that barely has seen the light of day goes on to say this:

> This task force is in general agreement that advance notification to employees and the community of plant closings and large scale permanent layoffs is good practice.

> The Office of Technology Assessment—> has recently reported that representatives of business, labor, communities and public agencies broadly, although not unanimously, agree that advance notice is an important element in helping displaced workers find or train for new jobs.

So we are talking here today about mandatory good corporate neighborliness in a way that this administration says is necessary.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to S. 2527, a bill that would apply an arbitrary and inappropriate 60-day notification mandate to reductions in work hours, shop closings, and layoffs. There are many reasons why this is a bad bill; I will touch on only a few.

The words of our former Democratic colleague, now the Lieutenant Governor of New York, are as timely and relevant today as they were when spoken on this floor about this same issue nearly 3 years ago:

> America stands on the precipice today * * * we could lose enormous additional numbers of industrial jobs in this country because of companies, both domestic and foreign, making logical decisions to relocate operations offshore.
> (I)f industrial policy is more government regulation, not a positive attempt to stimulate industrial revitalization and industrial development, then count me out; that is what I mean, not more regulation.

U.S. businesses need flexibility to keep up in increasingly competitive world markets.

Imposing additional costs on already-struggling firms will make them less able to compete and may even be the additional burden that drives them out of business altogether, destroying the jobs that could have been preserved for some by laying off others.

Flexibility is not merely a matter of profit but, frequently, of simple fairness to the innocent employer.

If a customer or supplier cuts down on a large volume of orders on short notice, the work simply is not there for the affected company.

Trying to protect jobs after-the-fact, regardless of abrupt changes in business conditions, will be counterproductive and result in discouraging job-creation.

Employers will be reluctant to expand capacity and create new jobs at the margins during good times, because each new job created is a potential source of litigation and liability at the next economic downturn.

Even a business that tries, in good faith, to comply with notification requirements, still could be hurt or put out of business as that notification becomes public knowledge and sources of credit and customers dry up in response.

To be safe, many employers will have little choice but to overanticipate when customers, suppliers, creditors, or the Government might cause them to make workforce adjustments on short notice.

The result will be many needless 60-day notifications of nonevents that, nevertheless, create great stress for workers and their families and cause talent drains when employers most need to retain their best employees.

Nor is the unforeseeable business circumstances exception in the bill the escape hatch the bill's supporters claim.

The exception basically is a defense the employer has the burden of proving in court after employees, a union, or a government files suit.

It's understandable and worthy for Members to be concerned about the impact that work reductions without notification has on workers. But lack of notification is not what this bill is really about.

Nor should we fool ourselves for a moment that this bill represents a final compromise.

This bill is a product of the philosophy, and a certain first step toward an agenda, of central planning that says to the entrepreneur, "Once you begin producing Edsals, buggy whips, or manual slide rules, don't ever expect to stop—we will not let you sacrifice one job today on the speculation that you will create two tomorrow."

When he retired a few years ago, U.S. Senator Paul Tsongas, from the same State as my party's Presidential nominee, warned us that it was bad for the country and for our Democratic Party that we were too fixated on redistributing the gold eggs without any concern over the health of the goose.

He was right, but I don't see why it has to be that way. Our system of democratic capitalism has its unpredictable cycles and its uneven performances, but it remains one of the few golden birds in the world and in history, in terms of creating wealth and jobs. We should be nurturing and working with it, instead of beating it because it doesn't produce golden eggs on some arbitrary schedule we come up with.

A brief look at our economy and our success at creating jobs, compared with the rest of the world, is instructive.

Western Europe, with such mandatory notice laws, has produced no new net jobs since 1970. We have added 38 million new jobs in that time.

As our fellow Democrat, Horace Busby, former Assistant to the President during the Johnson Administration has noted, since 1982, the United States, Hong Kong, Korea, and Taiwan—all without employment loss notification policies, have enjoyed average employment growth of 3.2 percent a year. The 16 European countries with mandated notification have gained only one-half of 1 percent a year.

Since 1982, the U.S. civilian unemployment rate has declined more than 4 percent, from 9.7 percent to 5.3 percent. In France, unemployment has gone, during that period, from 8.3 to 10.9 percent. In West Germany, from 5.9 to 6.9 percent. In Italy, from 5.4 to 8 percent. In the United Kingdom and Canada, there have been modest declines since their 1982 and 1983 highs, but in every year their unemployment rate has been higher than ours.

While I am not suggesting that notification of work reduction is the sole, or even primary cause of these differences, it is certainly typical of the broad array of burdensome workforce restrictions that are stifling job creation and propping up unemployment in those countries.

It's understandable and worthy for Members to be concerned about worker dislocation and readjustment. In fact, half, half of the problem motivating this mandated notification bill also is addressed in the trade bill we will consider later today.

We expect to see that trade bill become law. And in it, we already are providing over $1 billion for services for dislocated workers and trade adjustment assistance. Over $1 billion. Today.

We've heard complaints lately about items and programs hidden in huge omnibus bills. Here we are, poised with great certainty to authorize $1 billion in the trade bill for workers who have lost their jobs due to plant closings, layoffs, and other major disruptions, and yet we debate this notification bill as if no other relief is in sight.

If we are concerned about abrupt disemployment, there are better ways to deal with that issue, without resorting to a cure that is worse than the disease.

One better way to approach such problems is to promote voluntary notification and provide incentives for severance benefits, training, and readjustment. In fact, the Massachusetts notification law is, for most purposes voluntary and is triggered by a much tighter definition of a business closing.

Are we going to pass a law on the national level significantly more burdensome and expansive than Massachusetts' law?

Another better approach would be to let employers elect to provide severance pay or economically equivalent benefits in lieu of notification.

A fair system of electing alternative severance benefits would provide all the benefits of notification with none of the problems or costs, with the sole exception of some out-of-pocket costs.

This bill does approach severance pay in a backdoor sort of way. But only by counting it toward "damages" when the employer accepts the stigma and legal implications of being a lawbreaker.

In addition, the damages are too high and the prospect of an innocent employer being dragged into expensive and lengthy court proceedings and being assessed attorneys' fees remains unfair.

Common sense and experience show us that this bill is not the best, or only, way to skin this cat.

For example, Caterpillar, Inc., has had a collective-bargaining agreement with the United Auto Workers prescribing only 5 days' notice of layoffs, but also providing for severance benefits of up to nearly a year.

When other approaches are available, why do we need to impose, as a matter of Government fiat, a notification requirement far longer than even some of our most powerful labor unions demand in their individual agreements?

Another basic unfairness in this bill is that, like so many times in the past, we are slapping new burdens and requirements on employers without protecting them when work reductions are caused by government actions, such as agencies' contract decisions or Congress' failure to pass authorizations and appropriations for programs in a timely fashion.

This bill is bad not only for businesses and the general economy, but for the very workers it purports to help. For these reasons and others, I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in opposition to this bill.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], one of the cosponsors of this legislation and a prime mover of the legislation through this House.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, today's vote on advance notice for plant closings is a vote about workers, their families, and their communities. It is a vote about fairness, and about responsibility. It is about understanding the economic and human costs of a plant shutdown or layoff. And it is a vote about the hard reality of business in America, where fewer than 19 percent of businesses give more than 1 month's advance notice of plant shutdowns or mass layoffs.

What is before us today is a minimal, extremely flexible, 60-day advance notice provision for plant closings and mass layoffs. Advance notice is absolutely vital to a successful, effective worker adjustment program. Advance notice gives businesses, workers, local communities, labor groups, and government agencies the needed time to prepare for the shutdown, adjust to the new situation, and pursue new business and employment options. Twenty-two years ago, when he was better known as an economist than international diplomat, George Shultz wrote that "advance notice of major employee displacement to the workers, the union, and the appropriate government agencies is a procedural prerequisite for constructive action." That statement is as true today as it was in 1966.

Later on today we will be providing for the constructive action.

The trade bill contains the $980 million dislocated worker assistance program recommended by the Brock Task Force to aid workers, communities, and businesses in adjusting to changing economic circumstances. The Brock Task Force also found that advance notice is an essential component of a successful adjustment program. The National Academy of Sciences came to the same conclusion, as have many of our international competitors.

Everyone has come to the same conclusion: advance notice is essential. Every Member in Congress should know that by now, and every Member should ask him or herself whether U.S. businesses provide sufficient advance notice. The answer is that most of them do not. The average U.S. worker receives only 7 days' notice that he is going to lose his job because of a shutdown or layoff. Seven days to adjust to the most drastic situation a worker can face. It takes at least 2 months to get a worker adjustment program underway, even in Massachusetts, where we have a plant closing law. Most of the suffering and hardship that workers and their families undergo could be avoided if companies would take the simple, responsible step of adequately informing employees of an impending closing. But as the GAO found, 32 percent don't give any notice, and 34 percent give less than 2 weeks' notice. That is totally inadequate, unfair, irresponsible, and expensive.

Business does not bear the cost of a closing without notice—it is the workers, the communities, and the Government that has to make up for corporate irresponsibility. A 60-day advance notice requirement would save between $300 and $400 million in unemployment insurance costs, would reduce joblessness by nearly 4 weeks following displacement, and would increase displaced worker's earnings by over $1 billion. Clearly a "yes" vote today is the proper vote for fiscal and economic responsibility.

The anecdotal fears that advance notice ruins troubled businesses have not been borne out by the studies. And we have before us such a flexible proposal that companies which can't foresee shutdowns or layoffs, or are searching for capital to shore up their business, are exempted from the requirement.

I have seen too many workers tossed out on their ears without notice for me to believe that enlightened self-interest will make all businesses provide advance notice.

Last November, 50 workers at J.P. Stevens in my district were told 2 days before Thanksgiving that they no longer had jobs. What a thing to be thankful for. It's appalling, and we can do something about it. Vote for advance notice. It is the right thing to do.

This plant closing is a watered down version of the Clay-Ford-Conte plant closing bill that was defeated by a few votes in November 1985.

□ 1345

This is an anemic bill compared to the bill that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clay], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Ford] and myself filed, and it was defeated by only two or three votes back in November of 1985. This is a sop, a sop for the poor working man. Yet, look at a guy who started in a shop, a member of the union and a machinist, who worked with his hands and there was nothing more appalling—tear your heart out—when a guy would come in and say, "We are no longer going to work here. Somebody bought our company out. We are going to move to Sidney, NY."

You go home and tell your family that.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume for the purpose of engaging in a colloquy with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Miller].

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, in the Puget Sound area, we have a unique situation. There is a major aerospace company, Boeing Co., which has five major production facilities within a 50-mile radius.

I would like to ask the floor manager if he would answer a question of concern to many of my constituents.

Mr. CLAY. I would be happy to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. In the Puget Sound area Boeing has five major production facilities, Everett, Kent, Auburn, Renton, and South Seattle. Each facility produces a different product line. At the Everett facility, in my district, 747's and 767's are produced. At the Renton facilities, 737's and 757's are manufactured.

Am I correct that under the bill before us, if 500 employees are laid off at Everett, a mass layoff has occurred. However, if 101 employees are laid off at each facility, totaling 505 employees throughout the Boeing Co., a mass layoff has not taken place.

Mr. CLAY. The gentleman from Washington is correct. However, if more than 50 full-time employees are laid off and those 50 employees constitute at least 33 percent of the full-time work force, a layoff exceeding 6 months would require notice. The only exception to this would be if an entire facility or operating unit within a single site of employment were to be closed. Each of the five facilities you have described are separate sites under the definition in this bill and would not be aggregated.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Would this apply to other companies with similarly separate manufacturing facilities?

Mr. CLAY. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I thank the gentleman for answering my questions.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Tauke].

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, if I could have the attention of the floor manager of the bill, the gentleman from Missouri, I would like to ask him a question relating to the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand the legislation as it relates to the plant-closing section, it leads me to believe that so far as the layoff provisions are concerned, an employer would not have to provide notice to an employee unless the duration of the layoff or the shutdown exceeds 6 months. Is that a correct understanding of the intent of the legislation?

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Scheuer].

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Conte] set the tone of this debate. We are not talking about anything that a pointy-headed radical college professor dreamed up. We are talking about a bill that represents the consensus of America, Republicans and Democrats alike, the consensus of civilized people who have learned to care about workers.

Many corporations have already entered into these kinds of arrangements voluntarily with their workers—IBM, United States Steel, GM, Boeing, others, and virtually all of our major competitors across the world have done the same thing—England, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Japan, Canada. This is not something way out. This simply represents a civilized consensus in our country spanning the two parties.

These enlightened companies and nations know that adequate plant-closing notification contributes to employee morale and productivity.

The overwhelming consensus of the American people is that this is a decent, compassionate, caring way to treat the American work force.

Mr. Speaker, despite the available facts and the clear consensus of the American people, the Reagan administration and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce remain adamant in their opposition to this decent, humane, and civil legislation.

This refusal to recognize the needs of American workers symbolizes the administration's insensitive, uncaring, and neanderthal attitudes concerning the American work force.

The opposition of the U.S. Chamber is fortunate, but not astonishing.

The Chamber has always been 50 years behind the times.

If we had listened to such interests in the early part of this century, we would have no child labor laws and children still would be toiling in sweat shops at an age when they should be playing with toys.

If we had heeded their advice, there would be no minimum wage laws for those workers who are at the bottom of the economic ladder.

Their opposition to passage of the Securities and Exchange Act failed to defeat the law that has given millions of investors the confidence to invest in American enterprise.

If their opposition to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation had been successful, American depositors would not have the faith in the banking system that exists today.

These were all important pieces of legislation that have contributed to a healthy, competent work force and given workers the ability to buy the very products they produce.

Don't these people ever learn? Or are they like the Bourbon Kings who learn nothing and know nothing?

Mr. Speaker, it is time that the United States joins other industrialized nations and adopts a rational, civilized plant closing law.

It is time to say no to the naysayers in the Reagan White House and at the U.S. Chamber who perceive American workers as medieval serfs.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ridge].

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Chairman, there is a special relationship between employers, employees, and the workplace be they salaried or hourly employees.

First of all, there is a financial relationship. They get a paycheck. We understand that one. There is a social relationship. Friendships develop over the years. Social acquaintances develop over the years, they arise out of that relationship within the workplace. There is an emotional attachment to a workplace as well. Most men and women enjoy what they are doing, are committed to doing it as best they possibly can. It is their special contribution not only to their family but to their society and their community. They feel a part of the economic machine of this country. There is a financial, there is a social, and there is an emotional relationship between the employee and his or her workplace. Unfortunately business often unexpectedly and without notice rips that relationship apart. Sometimes they call their employees in on Friday afternoon, buy their employee a cup of coffee and say, "Incidentally, do not bother showing up for work on Monday." Sometimes employees report for work on Monday and the gate has been closed. Sometimes employers give 1 or 2 weeks' notice. These situations rip that relationship to shreads, and the longer one is involved with that particular employer or workplace, the more difficult it is for that employee to overcome the resulting financial, social and those emotional hardships.

Remember, we are not talking about men and women who get golden parachutes when they close the plant gate. We are talking about men and women who just get kicked out of the airplane.

We must redress this practice when possible. We all know people who have lost their jobs after 10, 15, 20 years—men and women who went to work, wanted to work, and whose financial and emotional foundation and stability are suddenly and unexpectedly destroyed. What do they have left? What can they go home to? How do they relate their predicament to their spouses? How do they relate it to their children? How did they now budget? Tragically, they are unable to prepare for this eventuality because they receive no notice.

All we are asking is the management when able to predict or foresee the need to close a plant or lay off large numbers of employees over long periods of time simply give notice to the employees and thereby the community. This legislation is sensitive to the uncertainties of the marketplace, but more importantly this legislation is sensitive to the human condition and the human spirit of those men and women whose lives are dramatically and often irreversibly changed by the loss of their jobs.

It hurts to lose one's job. It hurts to lose a job in this technical and ever-competitive world. Our young people particularly will have to change jobs two or three times in their life. We will never be able to eliminate the hurt when they or others lose their jobs unexpectedly, but this legislation will help them deal with the pain a little better. I ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Ballenger].

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to 2527. I think I am probably the only fellow here who has managed a plant during a recession, and I know that there are some sorts of exceptions involved, but I have 200 employees in my manufacturing plant. We have done this, not very often in the last 20 years, maybe two or three times, where business is bad, and we lay off half our workers, 100 people, and say, "You work 1 week, and you are off a week."

Somewhere along the line we need an exception in this bill in case of a recession, because I was speaking to a British businessman the other day, and he said to me, "We did this in Britain 25 years ago, our Socialist government put this in, and out of a clear blue sky, 25 years later, you are following in the same disastrous area that we are."

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. Hunter].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think that rarely have the main issues and the main differences between our two parties been so clearly met as they have in this bill. The Republicans stand for economic growth. Over the last 7 years since this administration has been in, we have created over 15 million new jobs. France was cited as an example for why we need plant closings by the other side, by the Democrats.

France has been losing jobs. They have lost hundreds of thousands of jobs since 1981. They refer to our job market as the American jobs miracle. The Republican Party is the party of economic growth. I think that if we vote for Governor Dukakis, we had better be ready for plant closings because there are going to be a lot of them.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. McCrery].

Mr. McCRERY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make one thing clear. I wish we had an open rule so I could offer an amendment on this point. This bill penalizes responsible employers, those employers who have bargained in good faith to provide severance benefits to their employees, who will be punished under this bill. An employer who has not bargained in good faith, has not provided serverance benefits, under this bill, can get out of the notification requirements by, in effect, providing severance pay, but an employer who has bargained for those benefits cannot get out of the closing notification requirements of this bill by providing severance pay. He has got to provide what he has bargained for plus a day's wages for every day of notification not given. It is not fair to responsible employers.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Houghton].

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I have been given 1 minute to sum up about 35 years of experience in employment practices, but if that is my lot, I obviously take it.

Mr. Chairman, there are obviously minuses to any national law, no matter what the subject is, and so it is with the case here. But I must believe that if we can get through the emotions of the moment that it is the basic tenet of our system that the responsible be protected from the irresponsible, and that is what this law does. It is not just for the employees. It is for management and owners, too. The large companies do this already, the good ones. The small companies have a door a mile wide to go through in terms of customer restrictions or financing difficulties, so let us not get hung up on our ideological high horse.

God is in the details, and the details of specifics say that this is a fair bill, a livable bill, and a good bill.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Ford].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of S. 2527, the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act. This very modest legislation makes good economic sense, it is flexible and fair, and it deserves the same overwhelming support in the House that it receives in the Senate.

Frankly, it is amazing to me that there is any controversy surrounding this bill at all. When it says, in effect, is only this: "any business which is reasonably sure it will have to terminate a large group of its employees must give 60 days notice of its intent, or as much notice as it can if it can't give 60 days' notice." It says people should be given a chance to prepare for the tremendous economic shock of job loss, that mayors should have a chance to find new employers for the community's citizens, and that training programs should be planned and put into place when they can be effective—before jobs are lost, not afterward.

That requirement is so simple and fair, so flexible and considerate of employers' needs, that if the details of the bill were better known public support for it would not be at 80 or 85 percent as it has been in every national poll; it would be at 100 percent.

This legislation is far more modest than the bill Senator Metzenbaum and I introduced in February last year. That bill required much more substantial notice, covered more businesses and more employees, and required employers to meet and consult with representatives of the affected community and the affected employees about ways to prevent or mitigate the damage plant closing can cause. We knew we could not hope to attract enough support to override the President's veto of that bill, and we have been engaged in a process of negotiation and compromise ever since.

S. 2527 is also far more modest than the bill the House debated over a period of 3 days in November 1985 and narrowly defeated. That bill, which I authored, required 90 days notice, did not contain the many explicit exemptions contained in this bill, and did not limit its coverage of layoffs to terminations affecting one-third of the work force or 500 employees.

This bill is a compromise. It does not go far enough to suit me, and it will not provide nearly as much help as it should to the working people of this country. But it will, at least, help hundreds of thousands of people get a jump on putting their lives back together after an economic disaster, and it deserves everyone's support.

The benefits of this bill have been analyzed and cataloged by a large number of respected, nonpartisan organizations in the last 2 years, including the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment, the National Academies of Science and Engineering, the W.E. Upjohn Institute, the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National League of Cities, and the administration's own task force on economic dislocation and worker adjustment.

Those benefits of even this very modest legislation are considerable. The several hundred thousand displaced workers who will receive notice under the terms of this bill will find new jobs a month faster than they would otherwise. This will provide the average displaced worker over $1,300 in extra income. A conservative estimate of this additional income, assuming 2 million people lose their jobs in layoffs and closings each year, is $1.5 billion.

S. 2527 will have a significant, positive impact on the Federal budget by reducing unemployment insurance costs. By shortening their period of unemployment, the bill will reduce the number of weeks displaced workers receive unemployment compensation. A study by the OTA found that the annual budget savings would exceed $300 million. A more recent study by the Economic Policy Institute estimates the bill's unemployment insurance savings at $410 million a year.

The Reagan administration estimates that approximately 750,000 Americans whose jobs will be eliminated by closings and layoffs each year will need the help of the Federal retraining and reemployment program for dislocated workers, title III of the Job Training Partnership Act. The administration supports spending $980 million a year on title III. Yet its own task force on economic dislocation found that advance notice is essential if the program is to be effective. The system of rapid response teams which is the heart of the displaced worker readjustment program, cannot work without advance notice.

And as the facts show beyond any doubt, without this act, without a Federal requirement, the majority of employers will continue to close plants and throw their employees into the streets without adequate notice—all too often, without any warning at all.

Even before Senator Walter Mondale and I wrote the first version of this legislation at the end of 1973, I knew in my gut that most businesses kept their employees in the dark about layoffs, plant closings, and relocations. I had seen it happen over and over again in my home State of Michigan. They told them only when they had to: when the machines were moved out, when the stores were boarded up, or even 5 minutes before the supervisors ordered the employees off the employer's property and cleaned out their lockers.

Ten years of Congressional hearings, criss-crossing the Nation from Pennsylvania to California, from Montana and Washington to Alabama, convinced me that my gut feelings were right. Plant closings were an economic disaster as severe for many communities as the worst natural disaster. And the affected parties—the laid-off working people, the local governments, and the small businesses that depended on the shut-down employer—often had less notice than they would of a flood or a tornado. In 1985, the Education and Labor Committee moved an advance notice bill to the floor, but lost by 5 votes.

Finally, in 1986, a Government survey of dislocated workers, conducted by the nonpartisan Bureau of Labor Statistics, proved that we were right. The BLS survey showed that more than 2 million Americans lose their jobs in plant closings and permanent layoffs each year, and that more than half of them lost their job with no warning or notice.

Even those who do receive notice often receive notice that is totally inadequate. Among large employers, more than half of those who do provide notice give only 1 to 14 days, according to a study by the GAO.

Overall, the median notice provided to American white and blue collar workers is only 7 days. The median notice given to nonunion blue-collar employees is only 2 days.

These figures, these facts, are an insult to the American people. They deserve to be treated with respect and decency. They demand respect. They will not be denied the minimal decency of treatment that this bill requires. The business community has failed them. President Reagan has failed them. But Congress, either today or next year, will answer the public's demand.

Let me turn to the content of the bill. The legislative history of S. 2527 is simply provided through the Committee reports on S. 538 and H.R. 1122, and the conference report on H.R. 3. Only the Senate amendments, which we are about to adopt, need any further explanation.

Of those amendments, the most ambiguous and troublesome is, obviously, the Dole amendment. It is crucial that it be understood that the Dole drought amendment is not meant to be a new exemption from the general requirement of the bill. We have checked with Senator Dole, and his intent in offering the amendment is simply to make clear that businesses taken by surprise by the drought—or any natural disaster—cannot be required to give more notice than they actually had of the economic catastrophe which has befallen them. They can only be required to give notice of what is foreseeable; and the full implications for agribusiness and related employers may not be known for months. But if an employer has actual notice that he will have to close or lay off employees 60 days before the event, the Dole amendment does not excuse his duty to give that notice.

Before agreeing to take up the Senate bill, we also verified this understanding of the Dole amendment with Senators Metzenbaum and Kennedy. It is no exaggeration to say that if this amendment had a broader meaning, S. 2527 would either not have been taken up in the House, or would have been brought up under a rule that would have amended section 3(b)(2)(B) or permitted an amendment to it.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2¼ minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the bill before us. S. 2527, the Worker Adjustment and Notification Act, is the product of a lot of work over a lot of years. But now its time has come.

During today's debate, every effort will be made to characterize this as a complicated bill. It is not. It simply requires larger businesses—those employing at least 100 workers—to give 60 days notice of plant closings or mass layoffs. No more than 5 out of 100 businesses in this country are even affected.

I know many of my colleagues think that notification should be voluntary. Well, that is exactly what we have today, and the record is not very hot. Voluntary notice has guaranteed workers an average of only 7 days notice. Voluntary notice has guaranteed that 3 out of every 10 employers do not give any notice at all.

The fact of the matter is that voluntary notice is a lot like a voluntary speed limit or voluntary taxes. It is a nice idea that just does not work.

This bill has been amended and refined so that I believe it will work. It will work for employees and employers and their communities.

I know my colleagues have concerns about this bill. These concerns are legitimate. I shared a lot of them. That is why I worked hard throughout this whole process with my colleagues in the House and Senate to fashion provisions to preserve employers' flexibility. We all know 60 days advance notice is not always possible, and this bill neither expects or demands it in every single instance.

If a closing is not reasonably foreseeable at the time notice is required, an employer need only give notice when he or she does realize that he or she will have to close down or lay off the requisite number of employees.

If an employer believes that notice will preclude obtaining business or financing necessary to keep the company afloat, the employer need not give notice.

If employees are hired only for a short term, for a particular project, or are offered continued employment, no notice need be given.

Finally, an employer can choose to not give notice and instead pay a penalty in lieu of giving notice. Indeed, if an employer does so promptly, it is relieved of any financial penalty to the local government. If employers and employees have bargained for other benefits, they would generally be in addition to the penalties provided under this bill. I think this proper, but I expect that collective-bargaining agreements in the next few years will be adjusted to take this legislation into account.

Many of my colleagues seem to think that providing plant closing notification and promoting new jobs are conflicting goals. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The trade bill contains nearly a billion dollars for retaining workers who lose their jobs due to a plant closing or layoff. Every single study agrees that such a retraining program is far more effective if it is accompanied by advance notice.

Taken together, the plant closing and worker readjustment bills will go a long way toward addressing our country's need for a work force with adequate and relevant skills. Nowhere is that need more dramatic than in those situations where workers are displaced by a decision to shut down a plant or lay off the employees at a worksite. Without efficient mechanisms to address those displacements, we are risking the loss of those workers as productive members of our economy. We need to reach out to them and see that they are placed as quickly as possible into new positions that either match their qualifications or for which they can be retrained.

When the House narrowly defeated a mandated notice bill 3 years ago, many Members voted against it because it was felt that we didn't know enough about the problem and were looking to the newly formed Brock task force on economic adjustment and worker dislocation for more insight. Representatives of both management and labor on that task force did examine the problem and ultimately concluded that notice is "an essential component of a successful adjustment program."

The task force couldn't decide whether notice should be mandatory or not. It is time now for us to decide. I suggest we approach this problem with a proper balance between compassion and practicality. And I believe that balance is found in this bill. In helping the worker, we will help our economy and, ultimately, our competitive posture in the world marketplace.

I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for this needed measure.

Mr. BOULTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to voice my support of privately initiated and designed layoff notification procedures, as well as placement service and assistance for workers that become unemployed. I cannot, however, support this bill, S. 2527, because of the effects it will have on a very real and clear problem that exists today. It is one that will be made worse and increase the pain already being felt in my State of Texas, not to mention other States that may be suffering similar economic difficulties. I am talking about the effect this piece of legislation will have on our Nation's financial institutions.

This bill, though some mistakenly say otherwise, will provide no real economic benefit to the United States, and it will not save one single American job. While passionate arguments have been offered in support of this bill, it is in fact nothing more than another example of the Federal Government tinkering with that wonderful mechanism known as the private sector.

Mr. Chairman, as we all know there is a crisis in the savings and loan industry. There are 344 insolvent savings and loan institutions in the United States today. And, in fact, during the last 3 months, troubled savings and loans have lost some $3.8 billion. During the past year they lost $11.5 billion. During the coming years we are looking at the possibility of merging or closing literally hundreds of savings and loans across the country. Some of us, like myself and other Members from the Southwest region of the country are also looking at the FSLIC's recently announced Southwest Plan. It has as its specific goal just that, closing and/or merging about one of every four institutions. In Texas that translates into the closing of approximately 400 S&L offices.

It is my opinion, as the majority member of the Banking Committee has stated, that there is reason to be concerned about the lack of explicit exemption for regulatory-initiated actions regarding the 60-day plant closing notice when applied toward an individual financial institution. Imagine what effects a 60-day notice would have on the deposites of a bank or savings and loan.

Federal Home Loan Bank Board Chairman, Danny Wall, has expressed his concern that this poses a serious problem that will only make the resolving of the S&L and banking problems more difficult. The FDIC is so concerned about this legislation that they have stated that they would contest any attempt to make it applicable to their industry. It is my opinion that this is not the proper way to resolve and address any potential uncertainty, and that nothing but additional difficulty will be added to an already unacceptable problem.

Without revision to exempt financial institutions Mr. Chairman, which is obviously not going to be addressed or corrected before final passage here today, I cannot overlook this potentially disasterous oversight and, therefore, cannot support this bill.

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Chairman, in the 99th Congress I opposed plant-closing legislation for the very same reason I oppose S. 2527, the Plant Closing Notification Act.

This legislation would require employers of 100 workers or more to notify their employees at least 60 days before ordering a plant closing or mass layoff. The intentions of S. 2527 are well taken. The plight of the dislocated worker is a serious matter but should be dealt with in the most appropriate manner.

There has been much talk today devoted to European countries that adopted similar measures considered before us today. Europe may have such laws but it has not been instrumental in improving employment opportunities or boosting economic growth. In the U.S. layoffs are at a 9-year low—42.9 percent fewer people are unemployed today because of layoffs than in 1980. The American economy has increased its employment in the same period by more than 38 million—without plant-closing legislation.

Running a business is a big risk. In some cases, a financially troubled business has no way of knowing how long it can survive due to a litany of circumstances, including market changes, changes in consumer attitudes and other unforseen circumstances. The bill tries to account for unforeseen circumstances by including exemptions, yet these are so subjective that their misinterpretation could result in increased litigation costs. In fact, one survey suggests that the annual cost of employers of the plant-closing legislation would result in $1.8 billion in administrative costs, penalties, and key employee losses.

I am also bothered by the liability of a business to act responsively to its industry's unique business cycle under the restrictions of this legislation. Will we penalize businesses for making a decision that will ultimately affect the future of its business? I am a small business owner, and although I do not employ 100 workers, I recognize the need to be flexible and responsive to my consumers. Although I believe employers should act in good faith and alert their community and employees as early as possible in the event of a plant closing—does the Federal Government need to intrude on decisions more appropriately left to employer and employee relations? As it stands, nearly 90 percent of American employers give some form of prior notice to their employees.

Mr. Chairman, I support a free market system which lets a business exercise its operations and decisions with minimum Government control. Instead of mandating plant closing status, we should place more emphasis on dislocated worker assistance through programs that will really assist them.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Chairman, I support S. 2527, the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Act, the plant-closing bill, which is important to every American worker, and especially important to the workers of northeastern Ohio.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, over 10.8 million workers have lost their jobs since 1981 due to businesses permanently laying off employees or simply closing down their factories all together. A vast majority of these workers had little or no warning or the havoc that soon followed. According to a study conducted by the General Accounting Office, businesses gave an average of 7 days notice to their employees that they would be losing their jobs. Recently the Office of Technology Assessment released a study reporting that workers who receive advance notice are more likely to be successfully trained and to be unemployed for a shorter period of time than those who do not.

I also want to express my strong support of the omnibus trade bill. This legislative proposal, which contains several amendments which I authored, will help eliminate many of the unfair and illegal trade practices of other nations. In an era when world trade has taken on increased significance, it is imperative that American businesses and workers be allowed to compete fairly. It is our patriotic duty to save American jobs from being exported overseas.

The bill that we are considering today consists of the plants closing provisions contained in the trade bill. S. 2527 would require employers of 100 or more full-time employees to give a 60-day advance notice of certain plant closings and mass layoffs. This would provide more adequate time for affected employees to either find other jobs or to enroll in training programs. There is widespread agreement across the Nation that providing the American worker with a 60-day advance notice is the least that we can do.

Unfortunately, President Reagan is expected to veto this plant-closing bill as he did with the omnibus trade bill. Yet the President gave Panamanian President Noriega, a drug-dealing king pin, a 90–day advance notice, and even Ed Meese was given a 30–day notice that he would be on the unemployment line. Is it fair for the American worker to be in constant fear that he may be losing his job at any minute, while high-ranking officials and drug dealers receive as much as 3 months notice that they will be unemployed? I think not, and I urge my colleagues to support this bill to the fullest extent.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, today the House passed S. 2527, the Plant Closing Notification Act. This measure is designed to ease the burden of plant closings on local economies, communities, workers, and their families.

Recent surveys have shown that an overwhelming majority of Americans, 79 percent, from every region across the county support plant-closing notification.

This is an area where the Presidential candidates differ. In Massachusettes, which has comprehensive plant-closing legislation, Governor Dukakis implemented an innovative program, stressing early notice in combination with creative plans to assist troubled companies and rapid-response retraining and job search assistance for workers. Since the passage of this legislation, over 200 companies have been saved and more than 20,000 workers have been helped to keep their jobs or find new ones. These results demonstrate clearly that plant-closing notification assists workers, their families, and their communities.

George Bush, however, opposes plant-closing notification. He has stated that plant closing "interferes with our ability to compete." He believes that giving workers 60 days' notice before they lose their jobs is bad for America. I disagree. I believe American workers deserve to be treated fairly and decently.

I commend my colleagues for passing S. 2527, the Plant Closing Notification Act, and guaranteeing protection of the needs of all American workers, their families, and their communities.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor of plant-closing legislation, I urge my colleagues to support this bill today, the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act. As all know, the House overwhelmingly passed the trade bill, which included this plant-closing requirement, and overrode the President's veto. Unfortunately, the votes to override the President's veto were lacking in the Senate. So separate legislation is required.

This bill requires that, in the event of an anticipated plant closing or layoff, firms employing 100 full-time workers provide a 60-day advance notice of termination on long-term layoff.

While there is no way to legislate against plant closings or layoffs in an economy that fluctuates as much as ours, common decency requires as much notice as reasonably possible when people are going to lose their jobs. That is the least we can do for workers in America.

Today, very few businesses provide reasonable notification of closing. On average, blue-collar workers receive 3 days' notice and white-collar workers receive 7 days' notice of termination. This is neither a reasonable or a fair business practice. Many plants intentionally lay off a specific category of worker or close down certain operations completely when particular job or function is no longer efficient. When plans have been made in advance to close, a 3- or 7-day notice will not provide a head of the family the time or resources to find another job.

The economy of the Pittsburgh area was built on older, basic manufacturing industries. Steel-related industries account for one-half of the manufacturing jobs lost and one-half of the plant closings of the last 4 years.

By providing a 60-day advance notice, a worker, along with their family, will have time to try to protect themselves a little bit. A worker can begin a training program, seek remedial education or job search skills training. A worker receiving 60-day notice will have the time to enroll and benefit from these programs before their unemployment assistance will run out.

Advance notice can also lessen the health and anxiety problems dislocated workers suffer. Workers faced with no job and limited skills often suffer serious psychological and physical side effects such as increased blood pressure, weight loss, ulcers, depression, and alcoholism. Even their mortality rate for dislocated workers is greater than those who have stable employment. Society ultimately pays one way, or the other.

Advance notification increases the earnings for both blue-collar and white-collar workers because the period of unemployment following their layoff is reduced.

The average worker receiving 8 weeks' notice finds work 3.7 weeks sooner, directly reducing unemployment compensation paid by Federal taxpayers. Given that 66 percent of displaced workers received unemployment benefits in 1986, potential savings from advance notice of layoff alone would be $410 million—a savings double the current costs of displaced worker programs. All of us taxpayers will benefit from this requirement.

Advance notification can also benefit the business community by improving labor relations and promoting the values of fair and ethical treatment of employees. Advance notification will even benefit the companies involved by setting out time to explore alternatives, to attract new owners or to negotiate a worker buyout. Contrary to opponents claims, OTA and the Department of Labor Task Force have shown that advance notice does not adversely affect productivity and in some cases even improves it. Thus, business too benefits from advanced notice.

This legislation is no cure-all, but it would be a help to communities hard hit by economic change. Justice demands that we support plant-closing legislation in an effort to help workers and their families reduce disruption of their economic expectations. We may not be able to solve all the problems associated with unemployment, but we can take steps to help people find a new job.

This plant-closing bill does not tie business' hands in making decisions. It only requires 60-day notice of layoffs and closings. That's the least we can do. I urge support of this bill in fairness to millions of American workers and families.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of S. 2527, the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Act. This measure consists of the plant closing and job layoff provisions contained in the trade bill, H.R. 3 passed by Congress and vetoed by the President last month. This bill is necessary to protect the workers of this country from unexpected job loss due to plant closings and layoffs.

This bill requires employers with 100 or more full-time employees to give a 60-day notice of certain plant closings and layoffs. For plant closings, notice is required if the shutdown results in the loss of 50 or more employees at the one location. For mass layoffs, notice is required if the layoff lasts over 6 months and involves over 50 workers who constitute over 33 percent of the work force at any location or if the layoff involves over 500 workers.

This is a fair and just measure. It is fair to the workers who deserve more than 1 or 2 days' notice of closings and layoffs. It is fair to businesses as well because the bill anticipates the special circumstances that would prevent companies from being able to give advance notice. This includes companies experiencing business circumstances that can not reasonably be anticipated and faltering companies seeking capital or business to avoid shutdown.

This measure is important because workers are needlessly left without work because of plant closings or layoffs. Approximately 10.8 million American workers lost their jobs due to plant closings and layoffs between 1981 and 1986. This is an average of 2.2 million workers losing jobs each year in a time of economic uncertainty. This bill addresses the problem because advance notice will give companies, labor unions, and Government agencies time to plan and develop strategies to help dislocated workers find or train for new jobs.

There should be no doubt but that this legislation will reduce the adverse effects of closings and layoffs. For too many workers lose their jobs without sufficient opportunity to prepare for a period of unemployment and job transition. Businesses provide workers on average only 7 days advance notice of plant closings or layoffs. Nonunion workers get on average only 2 days advance notice. This is outrageous. Surely these people, the workers, the backbone of this great Nation, deserve more consideration than this. Surely a worker who has put his or here whole working life or even a part thereof deserve more than 2 days' notice.

Studies have shown that an advance notice by employers of 2 months as this bill requires will shorten the period of unemployment for workers by an average of 3.8 weeks. That will create almost 2 full weeks of work for some 2.2 million workers who lose their jobs annually. By passing this bill, we get 2 weeks of work for 2 months advance notice. This is not too much to ask of employers who should know by that time anyway whether or not they plan to shutdown or layoff workers. And this will save an estimated $400 million in unemployment insurance and result in $1.5 billion in additional wages.

This bill is good for the workers of this country and good for the local economies of cities, towns, and boroughs throughout the country. It is supported by labor groups and leaders and has already been passed by Congress once this year. I urge my colleagues to come forward in strong support of his measure and pass S. 2527 at a sufficient margin to override a second Presidential veto. I recommend a vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for S. 2527, the Plant Closing Notification Act which is, in fact, a very modest measure. The bill simply requires that businesses employing 100 or more workers give 60 days' advance notice of plant closings that would result in job loss for 50 or more workers. It also requires 60-day notice of layoffs lasting 6 months or more, if the layoffs affect 500 or more workers, or 50 workers who constitute one-third of the work force at a plant.

Importantly, the bill allows for exceptions when closings result from unforeseen circumstances. Additionally, exceptions can be made if a company believes in good faith that providing the 60-day advance notice would preclude obtaining new capital or new business needed to avoid a shutdown. S. 2527 also exempts from notification requirements plant closings or mass layoffs that result from natural disasters, such as floods, earthquakes or drought.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, it is ludicrous that the United States, long a worldwide champion for workers' rights, is one of the few developed nations of the world that does not have either provisions in law or a general practice of advance notice of plant closing. This is a simple matter of fairness and human decency. Do not American workers have the right to know about decisions that may drastically alter their lives and their communities? Should not every opportunity be given our workers to plan for their futures in the face of a major layoff or plant shutdown? Keep in mind that this notification provision, while only affecting 2 percent of all firms, will protect nearly half of our work force by virtue of the fact that 49 percent of all employees in the private sector work for firms with 100 or more employees. It is also important to note that many major union contracts already have advance notification clauses, clearly demonstrating that American industry in fact can live with such standards.

Significantly, an Economic Policy Institute study found that an advance notice of 2 months is estimated to shorten the period of joblessness for a blue-collar worker by an average of 3.8 weeks. Annually, this reduced period of unemployment would save more than $400 million in unemployment insurance costs, and result in $1.5 billion in additional wages.

Mr. Chairman, in the interest of fairness for American workers, I urge my colleagues to support this modest but much needed legislation.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of S. 2527, the Plant Closing Notification Act, because I believe America's workers need and deserve to know in advance if their employer's doors are going to slam shut in their faces.

Generally, workers give their employers at least 2 weeks notice before they leave, but, unfortunately too many businesses do not extend that same courtesy to their employees. In fact, some workers don't get any notice at all.

Two weeks ago, a medium-sized midwestern company called its workers on Saturday, and told them that their jobs were gone—that their plant has closed—and that they could pick up their final paychecks the following Monday.

Just like that. No advance notice. No warning. Just a telephone call to tell the workers that they no longer had a job.

Each and every one of the 325 workers who had worked at the plant is now trying to find a new job.

Each of them must now scramble, borrow, and scrimp to make their house and car payments, to feed and clothe their families, and to meet all of their other living expenses.

With the economy in the Midwest the way it is, some of these newly unemployed workers probably never will find another job, and the Government will be forced to pick up the tab.

But there is absolutely no doubt that if this plant has been required to provide a 60-day advance notice of its closing, many of these employees would be working instead of collecting unemployment.

With advance notice they could have started their job search 2 months earlier. They could have entered job training programs. They could have moved to another area to find a job. They could have made financial arrangements to cushion the blow of unemployment.

Without a doubt, these 325 workers and thousands like them across the country would benefit from passage of the plant closing bill.

In spite of the administration's opposition to the bill, a recent report by the Secretary of Labor's task force on economic adjustment and disclocation stated that, "advance notification is an essential component of a successful [unemployment] adjustment program."

Furthermore, many business groups also recognize the benefits of advance notification. The Committee for Economic Development wrote that:

> Companies should provide as much notice as possible of decisions affecting jobs, particularly in cases of plan closings * * * advance notice allows employees the time to adjust, and management the time to plan and implement business moves that minimize hardship.

Although businesses and administration officials endorse the concept of advance notice, business practices is quite different. A GAO study found that a third of all businesses surveyed had no notification at all, and the average notification was 7 days in advance of the closing or layoff. The GAO study concludes that:

> While major business and labor organizations agree that to be effective, reemployment assistance should be in place prior to dislocation, few employers provided advance notice sufficient to establish such programs.

One of the most recent and comprehensive studies on plant closings was jointly funded by the National Science Foundation and the American Statistical Association. Using the best methodology available, this study found that 60 days of advance notice would put the average worker back on the job 3.8 weeks sooner. Thus, advance notice could save the Government $410 million in unemployment insurance every year.

Mr. Chairman, the words and testimony of business, government, and labor all indicate just how important it is for workers to know about plant closings and mass layoffs well before they receive their last paychecks.

I am convinced that most employers know of impending layoffs and plant closings in advance. If they don't then they won't be affected by this bill. But, if they know their employees will soon be out of work, they need to tell them.

For the past 15 years, my colleagues and I on the Education and Labor Committee have worked to enact a plant closing bill. The bill we have before us today is the final product of our efforts. I believe that S. 2527 is a well-crafted, bipartisan bill designed to protect America's working men and women and I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my full support for S. 2527, a bill to require employers to give at least 60 day advance notice in the event of a plant closing and or major layoffs. It is essential that we pass this basic civil and economic rights bill for workers who may face this problem in the future. This is a vote of good consience and compassion which this 100th Congress must take for the working people of this Nation.

My personal commitment and involvement to this issue relates in a far more personal way than merely due to my status as the ranking New York member of the Education and Labor Committee. On December 1, 1982, the United Technologies Corp., announced their plans to close the Otis Elevator Co. in Yonkers, NY, part of my congressional district. This was no ordinary business—it had been one of the main economic mainstays of Yonkers, having been in continuous business since 1852. On that fateful day in December, it was announced that Otis Elevator would immediately begin layoffs and by the middle of 1983, all of the more than 1000 employees would be out of work and the company closed down.

I delivered a 1-minute speech on this subject in early December 1982. I referred to the decision by United Technologies as an "act of moral larceny against the city and people of Yonkers." The particular circumstances of this action were especially irksome due to the fact that prior to United Technologies acquisition of Otis, a total of $14 million in Federal, State, and city money was spent to expand Otis operations and to increase its employment to 2000.

This was a glaring instance of corporate arrogance—with tragic consequences to the working man. This also provided one of the most graphic examples of why a bill of this type is needed—to at least mandate a modicum of responsibility and consideration by an employer that too often is abdicated in the haste to implement a decision to shut down.

Our motivation to pass this legislation was also based on a General Accounting Office survey done of plant closings that occurred during 1983 and 1984. This report showed that a mere 9 percent of those companies gave advance notice of 3 months or more before a permanent shutdown. Moreover, approximately one in four workers discovered their termination on the day they lost their job. Nearly two thirds of blue collar workers received less than 2 weeks' notice.

The bill before us is long overdue. It is not as though the House has not tried. We considered a bill but came to no final resolution on it in 1985. Language mandating 60-day advance notice was included in the trade bill, yet it was vetoed and this unfortunate Presidential decision was sustained. Now we have a third opportunity, and indications are that we will finally succeed. The Senate has adopted this legislation by a large enough margin to ward off a veto. We must do the same today.

Specifically this bill requires:

Employers with 100 or more full time employees to give 60 days notice in advance of plant closings if such a shutdown would result in a loss of 50 or more employees at one site; and

For layoffs, advance notice would be required if the layoff is for more than 6 months and affects 50 or more employees who make up one-third or more of the work force at one site. The required advance notice must be given to the plant's unions or to affected employees without a union.

Exempt from the provisions of this bill are those companies forced to close due to natural disasters or those considered to be "faltering companies" actively seeking capital or business to avert a shutdown.

An employer who was required but failed to do so would be liable for money damages to those employees who were entitled to receive notice. In addition, under this bill the employer would also be liable to pay damages to the local community and employees, employee organizations and local governments could bring suit in Federal district court to recover damages due by an employer.

What this bill does is only the right and fair thing to do for workers, and their families who might some day face the trauma of sudden job loss. It gives them time to plan and make changes. It gives them time to look for alternatives. Above all, it may give time for a better deal than unemployment to be worked out. Time can be such a critically important factor in all of this. We are providing that time with this bill. It is tragic that we have to pass legislation to do this but the rule has been that employers do not take the responsibility or show the compassion. Let us go forward and deal with this problem, but continue our work toward addressing the larger issue—the promotion of improved economic opportunities and expanded employment to make this type of notice a truly rare experience.

To again make the point for why we need this legislation and why we must work to improve economic opportunities for all Americans, I wish to insert into the RECORD an article from the January 30, 1983, Gannett Westchester newspapers which focuses on the real life crises facing some of the 1,000 workers from Otis Elevator who were laid off. Imagine what greater advance notice might have done for some, if not most, of these workers. You might not have had an Otis Elevator type closing in your district, but you could. If you have or if you can sympathize with those workers who have endured this problem, your only response must be to vote for this bill.

[From the Gannett Westchester, Jan. 30, 1983]

DOWN AND OUT AT OTIS—WORKERS FACING LAYOFFS ASK: "WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

(By Jennie Tritten)

Editors Note: With yet another round of layoffs in the offing, workers at the century-old Otis Elevator plant in Yonkers face a grim 1983. Jennie Tritten, a life-long Yonkers resident and staff writer for The Herald Stateman, last week interviewed some of the workers whose jobs are now on the line.

Instead of planning their summer vacations, many of the remaining 375 Otis Elevator workers are bracing themselves in anticipation of joining the millions of unemployed Americans.

While older employees are planning their unexpected early retirements, the younger men and women are busy preparing resumes and looking for new jobs. The first of the latest round of layoffs is scheduled to be announced later this week.

Carlos Rodriguez of Haverstraw, a 41-year-old machinist for Otis, has found a unique way of looking for a new job. During a recent tour of the eight-building complex conducted for real estate brokers, Rodriguez posted a large sign that read: "Machine operator for hire call 914-623-4275".

"I was hoping some visiting businessman would see the sign and give me a job," says Rodriguez, who has six years of experience at Otis.

Unfortunately, his sign failed to produce any job offers that day. If Rodriguez is unable to find employment, he says his wife will have to find a full-time job to keep up their house payments. Rodriguez and his wife have a 10-year-old son and seven-year-old twin daughters.

Mrs. Catherine Ritacco, 49, has worked for Otis for 32 years. "I'm too young to retire," says the Yonkers resident, who rents an apartment in the Manning Avenue home owned by her elderly parents.

Ritacco, a time-card clerk, does not think the 32 years of service at Otis qualifies her for any other kind of work. "My experience at Otis was unique to that work. I'll have to be re-trained for other work. I may go into computers," she says.

Layoffs have touched her relatives as well. She says her 25-year-old nephew, Richard Bruno of Yonkers was laid off in September 1981 from his accountant job at Otis. "He was lucky. He found a good job a few months later at Dellwood Dairies," she happily adds.

On the other hand, she comments: "My aunt, Dolores DePalma of Yonkers, was laid off in July from her office job at Otis and still has not found work."

Otis layoffs have already affected the budget of the Ridzik family living on Webster Avenue in Yonkers.

Andrew Ridzik, 51, and his three sons all have been employed at the plant. Drew, 24, was laid off last August. Says his father: "He can't find a job with the pay matching what he earned at Otis."

But that was only the beginning. Now the senior Ridzik, who is employed as a computer operator in the storeroom, as well his son, Daniel, 22, a truck driver and crane operator, also expect to be laid off.

The family unemployment problems are further compounded by the fact that a third son, Steven, lost his job in the city's Parks Department last November.

Ridzik, who at 51 is too young to qualify for a pension, plans to send out resumes after he's laid off. For the past 21 years Ridzik has held a part-time job with the U.S. Postal Service to help ends meet. "But I can't be hired fulltime on that job," he laments.

Dan Sabol, a 34-year-old machinist with a wife and a three-year-old to support, is more hopeful. The Yonkers resident says he has already sent out 20 resumes. "I'm not begging Otis or United Technologies Corp. (the parent company located in Hartford, Conn.) for anything," says Sabol. He says many of the workers at the plant feel the same way.

"I'm not looking for any handouts from the company. I can take care of myself," says Sabol, who quickly adds, "The hell with UTC."

As for Rose O'Hara of Somerville Place in North Yonkers, she is planning to try to earn her living taking care of children after she's laid off from her job as a time-card clerk. "Who's going to hire a 40 or 50-year-old, when the younger people are finding it hard to get a job?" asks the self-supporting mother of a married son. "I spent 38 years of my life working at Otis and too bad it has to end this way," she adds.

She says she can't understand why some workers still believe the plant will be saved. "They were told the plant is closing. When the dentist tells you a tooth must come out, that's it."

Another North Yonkers resident, Joseph Ponko of Palisade Avenue, says he began working at Otis as a mailroom boy in 1948 after serving in the Army during World War II.

A 55-year-old computer operator, Ponko says that for the past 35 years he has worked in various jobs at the Yonkers plant. "I'm not sure what kind of work I can get. I want to work," says Ponko, who has had a taste of being laid off in 1981. "Those were three tough months being without work. Then they called me back," he says.

Ponko does not agree with Otis' statements that the elevator business is off. "Just go to New York City and you'll see all the high-rise construction," he says. "The products made in the Yonkers plant were good and will not be matched by those manufactured in Japan and France with cheap labor," he adds.

Oscar Terry, 50, a machinist, is taking the events at Otis one day at a time. "I'll cross that bridge when I'm laid off," he says. But he adds, "I really don't know if I can find a job. Fortunately, my house is just about paid off."

Terry works in the $10 million new manufacturing and storage building Otis built in the mid-1970s. The expansion plan had been aimed at increasing production at the plant where there was a 1,400 workforce.

When asked about the attitude of the current 375 workforce, Terry, a New City resident, comments: "Many of them are still in shock and really don't believe Otis will close down. But that's a matter of fact and was planned with United Technologies took over Otis."

William Johnson, a motor assembly worker from Greensburgh, recently celebrated his 50th birthday. But the golden birthday was clouded by his impending layoff after 27 years at Otis.

"I put my son through college and my daughter finishes medical school in June," Johnson says proudly. "The dream I had to put my 12 and 15-year-olds through college is stymied right now," he adds. "There's no telling what kind of jobs are available out there. There's no doubt in my mind the income will be less than I now earn."

Yet, there was a small ray of hope in Johnson's outlook for the future. He is confident that the many skills he learned over the years in Otis working on motors and generators and as an armature winder would help him land another job. "I was very proud of my work and the different skills I learned on the various jobs I performed and what I had accomplished," he says.

Johnson is worried about his famiily's financial future because his wife is unable to hold a full-time job because of illness. He is anxious to know just how much Otis would contribute towards hospitalization coverage. He hopes his skills would warrant him staying on the job at least until June when his daughter completes college.

"What puzzles me was all those speeches made by the Otis officials and politicians on the platform when the new manufacturing building was dedicated. They promised us more work and new jobs," he says. "I think Otis and UTC sold the workers down the river and they didn't give us all the facts."

And like so many others, he asks, "Where do I go from here?"

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Chairman, today we are voting on legislation which can help workers and communities to respond to the difficult problem of plant closings. Without imposing serious burdens on companies, this legislation will help workers to reorganize their lives following a plant closing and perhaps even keep faltering businesses open.

The 1970's and 1980's have been decades of dramatic economic changes, both good and bad. Entire new industries have started up like biotechnology and robotics firms, but many companies have been forced to close because of competition from abroad or because of decreasing demand for their products.

We must do all that we can to help the workers and communities adjust to the traumatic experience of the closing of a major company. Advance notification of plant closings provides a simple, elementary way to help these individuals.

Currently companies provide little notice of plant closings. An indepth study of closings undertaken by the Government's General Acounting Office revealed that the median length of notice provided to workers was just 7 days, and that one-third of the companies polled provided no notice to their workers of a plant closing. Imagine how difficult it would be to walk into work one morning and find that your company had gone out of business, and that you had lost your job.

Of course a company's management usually knows weeks, if not months in advance if a plant is likely to close. Allowing workers access to this basic information about their employer would dramatically help them to cope with the loss of their jobs. In some cases unions and the affected community could even buy the plant themselves in order to keep it open. If the plant does close, workers would be emotionally prepared to deal with this difficult situation, and they could prepare themselves to find new employment.

And research data shows the advance notification effectively reduces workers' periods of unemployment following plant closings. A National Academy of Sciences report shows that advance notification reduces unemployment for dislocated workers by approximately 25 percent.

Nor does this legislation impose undue burdens on businesses. Even the Reagan administration's Labor Department Task Force found that advance notice actually "contributes to improved productivity" and another government study found that there was little evidence that creditors or customers deserted the company after notice was provided.

This legislation will help many thousands of workers to rebuilt their lives following a plant closing. With the passage of this separate bill, the Reagan administration cannnot use the excuse that the legislation doesn't belong in the trade bill. That wasn't a good reason to veto the trade bill, and there is no good reason to veto this bill. I urge my colleagues to give this bill our unanimous support.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, today we are discussing S. 2527, legislation which will ensure the employee rights due to plant workers confronted with job loss. This bill contains the same provisions as the plant closing notification section in the trade bill recently vetoed by President Reagan. When the House voted and passed H.R. 3, the Omnibus Trade Act, I stated my strong support for the plant closing notification provisions. So I am here again today on behalf of a separate bill, a measure supported by an overwhelming 86 percent of the public.

Despite favorable employment rates, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that approximately 2.2 million workers lost their jobs each year between 1981 and 1986 due to plant closing or permanent layoffs. That's 11 million workers over 5 years. According to the GAO, of the two-thirds of the businesses that did give notice, 36 percent gave less than 2 weeks advance notice, and 50 percent gave less than 1 month advance notice. The loss of a job is bad enough in and of itself; why must it be more difficult by not receiving reasonable notification?

What's more, factory workers are not afforded the white collar benefits of severance pay or dislocated worker assistance. One day they are bona fide employees, only to find out the next day that they have only a few weeks or days left to work. While these workers are able to transfer to a new job, there certainly isn't the guarantee that a new job will be available. If a 55-year-old worker is laid off, what are the chances that he or she will be readily employable? Or what are the chances that even a younger worker will be able to find a job that will support his family? Given 2 weeks to look for new employment, the first job available might be the one taken, even if it can't make ends meet.

The people in my district of Ohio are more than familiar with the effects of job layoffs. These people have few places to turn. By implementing plant closing legislation we can reduce some of the shock as well as the time needed to find new work. That is, if new work is even available. My district has one of the, if not the most, sagging economies in the State; new jobs are a rare bred.

S. 2527 is a fair bill because it provides workers time—60 days to move forward to new employment. It provides families with better financial stability and piece of mind, as well as maintaining a productive community structure. I urge my colleagues to vote for this measure. Let's give our workers the dignity of reasonable plant closing notification.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, at the conclusion of our debate I will vote in favor of the legislation before us. For the benefit of my constituents and my colleagues who are undecided, I would like to state my reasons for doing so.

At the outset it should be recognized that the question of mandating advance notification has been kicking around Congress for several years now. It is not a new issue. Over the past decade that I have served in this body I have observed, on the one hand, the devastating impact of plant closings on workers and communities and, on the other hand, the negotiations in the House and the Senate to craft a reasonable, prudent advance notification bill.

I have come to believe, firmly believe, that workers deserve to know that their jobs will be eliminated, if advance notification can indeed be given. And I also believe that the negotiations on the specifics of the bill have been tremendously successful in that it recognizes that there are situations which preclude advance notification and it discourages frivolous suits against a company that was unable to provide the full 60 days' notice.

My decision to vote for this bill was not made hastily or without reflection, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about this small but important change in U.S. labor policy. Judging from the debate one might think that our whole economic system rests upon our decision to give this Nation's workers a reasonable period of notice before they experience a major dislocation.

In order for our country to survive in this increasingly competitive world market, American businesses must be able to react quickly. That is the rationale against the plant closing provision of the trade bill. It is a sound argument, but it misses the point. If our Nation is going to regain its competitiveness, all sectors of our economy must be able to react quickly to changes, not just high paid business executives. That is the purpose of the 60-day notification period; to increase the ability of America's workers to compete in the market.

Sixty days' notice will create a smoother transition period for our workers. If notice is provided it will be easier to enroll employees in job training programs which will equip them with the tools to find meaningful employment. If we are going to regain our stature as the world's preeminent economic power, no able-bodied worker can be idle. Giving workers the ability to find new employment quickly will increase our competitiveness. It will also enable workers to work from within to save ailing companies through labor agreements or employee ownership plans.

Much has been made of the supposed costs of these provisions to American business. Lets look at just a few of the benefits. The Economic Policy Institute, in a recently published study, estimated that 60-day notification of workers would reduce the period of joblessness by an average of almost 4 weeks, saving $400 million in unemployment insurance costs, and providing $1.5 billion in earnings that would have been forefeited.

Mr. Chairman, the U.S. economy does not rest upon this issue. Businesses will continue to function under this law. S. 2527 will improve the flexibility of our system, not weaken it. At the same time, it will inject a small bit of fairness, giving this Nation's most vital resource, its workers, the ability to compete in an ever changing economy. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, special interests politics are often wrapped in the language of compassion. We have before us a bill that it is ostensibly designed to help workers by requiring businesses to provide them with advance notice before plants are shut down. When the issue is framed in that way, few can object to it. We must, however, look beyond the sales pitch and consider the effect that the language will actually have.

If a business struggling to survive is required to announce, weeks in advance, that a plant may be shut down, any chance it may otherwise have had to overcome its difficulties will be destroyed. No one will extend it even the temporary credit necessary to continue day-to-day operations, skilled and valued workers will resign, and customers will take their business elsewhere. Advance notice, as innocuous as it is made to sound, will ensure that plants which may have had a chance to stay in business will be be shut down. In a sense that its sponsors never intended, this truly is a plant closing bill.

How can such a law possibly benefit workers? It will destroy their jobs.

We must not be deceived by proposals that seem compassionate on the surface but which harm workers in reality.

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this legislation. The initiative we are discussing today reflects the hard work of many of my colleagues to resolve the problems that the Reagan administration has with treating American working men and women with fundamental fairness.

American workers have been hit very hard by the trade deficit and by the structural changes that have taken place in our economy. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that about 2 million workers a year have lost their jobs due to plant closings, layoffs, or through job elimination. Most of these dislocated workers receive little or no notice of impending layoffs or plant closings.

During my 35 years as a leader in the trade union movement, I negotiated a number of collective bargaining agreements across this country. In the meat packing industry, it was common practice to include a 6-month plant closing provision in our agreement. Six months notice was normal, ordinary and expected. Businesses recognized that basic fairness required that employees caught in a plant closing situation need to give appropriate and adequate notice to creditors and others in the community who may also be adversely affected.

Mr. Chairman, I support this bill for four basic reasons:

First, advance notice reduces unemployment for dislocated workers by 27 percent;

Second, if passed, this bill will reduce unemployment benefit costs by $300 million;

Third, early notice makes worker adjustment programs more successful in finding new jobs for displaced workers;

Fourth, the benefits of advance notice substantially outweigh the costs.

I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in voting in favor of this much needed legislation.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Plant Closing Notification Act.

While I believe that companies should give employees as much advance notice as possible of a plant closing, I cannot support the mandatory notification requirement in S. 2527. Requiring companies to provide at least 60 day's notice prior to a closing or layoff involving 50 or more employees would inhibit a company's economic flexibility, make businesses less competitive and lead to the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs.

This legislation would reduce management's discretion to make decisions about a company's economic viability. It incorrectly assumes that businesses can adequately predict fluctuations in the marketplace. Financially-weak employers struggling to survive may not know their employment conditions 60 days ahead of a severe disruption. Premature notice will only aggravate their financial and employment problems by jeopardizing relationships with suppliers, creditors, investors, and current and potential customers.

Furthermore, this legislation would discourage firms in the United States from hiring new employees. It is estimated that if mandatory notification had been in effect from 1982 to 1986, 460,000 fewer persons would have been employed. Employers would be reluctant to hire new workers if their total employee numbers would then jump over the plant closing/layoff trigger of 99 workers. This phenomenon has occurred in France where employers known as the "forty-niners" refuse to hire more than 49 employees due to government restrictions which apply to employers of 50 or more. Thus, this bill would discourage entrepreneurial firms from business expansion and hiring of new workers.

Finally, this legislation will make U.S. companies less competitive due to increased costs from delaying necessary restructuring. When a business is sold, the purchaser would be forced to hire all existing employees within a 6-month period. The additional cost of maintaining surplus workers will cost an estimated $1.8 billion per year.

Voluntary advance notice is increasing. The Government Accounting Office [GAO] has reported that nearly 60 percent of employers give more than 2 weeks notice. Advance notification of a plant closure is often an issue in collective bargaining. In this process workers have the opportunity to negotiate for advance notice of a company's closure. Such agreements are often reached as a result of compromise by both employer and the employees.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this bill as an unnecessary, unrealistic and counterproductive type of government interference in the workplace which will contribute to the demise of American competitiveness and jobs.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of S. 2527, legislation to require advance notice for plant closings and mass layoffs. While the provisions contained in S. 2527 are by no means as strong or as comprehensive as the original language in the House-passed trade bill, the bill does, for the first time, establish Federal plant closing notification standards.

Mr. Chairman, no one questions the right of companies to manage their affairs in the most economic and efficient manner, including decisions to close redundant facilities. However, American corporations do have a social and moral responsibility to their workers and to the communities in which they operate to mitigate, to the greatest degree possible, the impact of massive layoffs associated with the closing of manufacturing facilities. Asking large corporations, with worldwide operations and profits, to provide American workers and communities with 60 days advance notice of plant closings that would result in the loss of 50 or more jobs is not particularly onerous.

Mr. Chairman, my district has experienced four plant closings and layoffs in the last year alone, affecting over 10,000 individuals, so I am acutely aware of the corrosive effect such economic dislocation can have on our people, our communities and our society. A 2-month notice period would give workers time to find new sources of income and would allow community leaders time to prepare and strengthen the social safety net needed to help those who are unable to find alternative employment. The community could come up with various alternatives.

A number of recent studies bear out the usefulness of advance notice requirements for workers and communities. Even the Department of Labor, in its Task Force on Economic Dislocation and Worker Adjustment Report, called the European and Canadian advance notice laws "useful and transferable," stating that such laws "significantly facilitate workers reemployment." Moreover, the highly respected Economic Policy Institute found that advance notice requirements would reduce joblessness by almost 4 weeks, would save $400 million in unemployment insurance costs, and would provide $1.5 billion more in earnings to displaced workers. The report also cited a number of current studies by the Office of Technology Assessment and the National Academy of Sciences that failed to find evidence of substantial harm to business.

Mr. Chairman, 80 percent of the American public favors notifying workers that a plant is about to close. I urge my colleagues to support the Plant Closing Notification Act.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the bill before us today. I also rise incredulous at the insensitivity that this administration has shown toward the working men and women of this country.

Today we are considering a measure which should have been signed into law weeks ago. But President Reagan decided that warning American workers in advance of a plant closure—which most large firms already do—was so egregious that he vetoed the entire trade bill because this provision was attached.

It's time to send this legislation back to his desk, to let him know once again that the Congress and the overwhelming majority of the American people support this effort to prevent companies from leaving workers in a serious bind on a moments notice.

It should come as no surprise that this administration fails to recognize the human costs of failing to notify workers, especially workers with families, that tomorrow they will be out of a job. After absorbing the trauma of sudden unemployment, workers and their families must face the loss of health and other employee benefits on which they long depended. With no advance warning—no opportunity to prepare for the future or to train for new employment—they must turn to temporary or part-time work at low wages in order to make ends meet.

Of those individuals who lose their jobs in these circumstances, at most an estimated 60 percent find new employment. Evidence reveals that seniors, blacks and other minorities find new jobs only half of the time. The end result is a dramatic drop in health and living standards for dislocated workers, particularly for those who can least afford to carry this unaniticipated burden.

As the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, which I chair, has found, the socioeconomic impact is equally dramatic. The strain caused by sudden unemployment acts as a catalyst for family breakdown: increased domestic violence, child abuse, poor child health, and severe stress on family well-being. Reports show that every displaced worker—and there were about 275,000 in 1986—would have earned $1,300 more to support his family had he been notified in advance of being laid off.

Why won't this administration follow its own advice? The President's Task Force on Economic Dislocation and Worker Adjustment supported advance notification of plant closures in its report. The task force concluded that advance notification will enhance—not harm—U.S. competitiveness, by facilitating the adjustment of dislocated workers into new and more productive employment. When people are better prepared for change, they will be better able to adapt. In addition, in this time of budget crisis, advance notice would save the U.S. Government $400 million in unemployment insurance.

According to the President's own task force, the more stringent advance notification requirements adopted by Europe long ago have in no way inhibited structural economic adjustment. All the leading market economics—including Japan, Germany, and England—have plant closing laws, but their economies are more competitive and flexible than ours. It is the United States that suffers from a trade deficit of enormous proportion, while most all of these countries are running trade surpluses. As this country's premier business newspaper, the Wall Street Journal, has pointed out, the plant closing provision is a reasonable effort that fits "squarely in the tradition of such social reforms as child labor and minimum wage laws."

Plant closing notification is of critical concern to my constituents. In my district of Contra Costa County, 29 large businesses closed down from 1980 to 1984, eliminating an estimated 6,000 jobs. The city of Richmond has been very hard hit.

The full impact, however, has been much greater because for every job lost to a closure, an estimated five more are lost in other parts of the community. A manufacturing plant supports a wide range of services—those provided by doctors, lawyers, and small businesses. When a plant shuts down, these services go with it. This "ripple effect" is devastating throughout the country. But in the San Francisco Bay area, an estimated 10,000 jobs are lost each year, with a total impact of over 200,000 jobs.

Mr. Chairman, the Plant Closing Notification Act is necessary not only because it is sheer callousness to allow companies to lay off suddenly their employees. Leaving workers in a lurch is also poor economics.

I urge my colleagues to lend their full support to this legislation.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I first want to express my appreciation to the leadership of the House, and the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, for bringing S. 2527, the Plant Closing Notification Act to the floor separate from the omnibus trade bill.

While I voted for H.R. 3 which included the plant closing notification provisions, I think most of us in the House would have preferred from the beginning to consider this legislation separately from the trade bill. Certainly, most Members of the House have questions regarding which companies and employees are affected by the plant closing bill and how the bill will be implemented.

While we are engaging in general debate, I think it is important to analyze and understand why this plant closing bill, S. 2527, is different from previous worker notification legislation which was considered in the 99th Congress.

When the House considered worker notification in 1986, I voted against it because the requirements and costs it would have imposed on businesses far outweighed the benefits which employees of closed companies would have received. The notification requirements contained in previous legislation, H.R. 1122, imposed inordinate and onerous requirements on businesses.

Plant closings and worker layoffs are economic rather than political issues. How we address this problem should be equitable and pragmatic, rather than apolitical. In our hearts, probably all Members of this House sympathize with the needs and predicaments which workers face in the wake of a plant closing or layoff. Equity, fairness, and other basic human concerns dictate that workers receive notification of a possible plant closing or layoff to prepare and plan for their future.

Communities are also affected by closings and layoffs. Obviously, the larger the employer is relative to the size of the community, the greater the impact a closing or layoff. Therefore, communities also need time to prepare for and adjust to a plant closing or a massive layoff. It should be noted that a large percentage of companies already voluntarily give some form of notification to their workers of a closing or a layoff. Companies with such policies are to be commended, and they should be encouraged to continue to do so.

This legislation attempts to identify situations where worker notification can reasonably and feasibly be given, and to exempt certain employers in particular situations where notification under the circumstances is either impossible, or detrimental to the employment of existing workers. It is not the intent of this legislation to impose a standard notification requirement on all businesses in a burdensome hamhanded manner.

Unlike previous legislation, this bill exempts several types, categories and groups of employers for whom notification would either be impractical, or impossible. It would be useful to examine which employers are not covered by this bill.

For example, the bill excludes small businesses with less than 100 employees from the notification requirements.

Notification is not required where the closing or layoff results in an employment loss of less than 50 people at one site.

For purposes of counting the number of employees at a particular plant or site, the notification provisions do not include part-time employees or employees who have been employed for less than 6 months.

The bill does not require notification if the closing or layoff is caused by a natural disaster; for example, floods, earthquakes, drought, and so forth, or by business circumstances that were not "reasonably foreseeable" when the notice would have been required.

Companies such as troubled financial institutions—as in the "thrift industry"—which are actively seeking capital to avoid a closing or layoff are exempted.

Employees who know their employment is temporary when they are hired are not covered by this bill, such as in various construction jobs.

Companies where employees have been rehired following the sale of the company are not required to provide notification

Employers are not required to give notice to "economic strikers" as defined by the National Labor Relations Act if they are replaced with other workers.

The number of exceptions and exclusions in this bill raises questions about the value of this legislation to workers, or the imposition that notification creates for employers when it is required. To quote from an editorial that appeared earlier this year in the Journal of Commerce, the paper termed the importance of the much ballyhooed plant-closings provision "far more symbolic than real."

The exceptions are so wide that lawyers will have no difficulty helping their clients with legitimate cases to navigate through them. In any case, the penalties for violation—back pay for workers involved, plus a maximum fine of $500 a day—are trivial. Although it does indeed move the government into a new area of labor relations, the amendment will make little difference in the way businesses do business.

Similarly, the Washington Post also commented on the overblown importance of the plant-closing provisions:

> Most companies of the size that would be affected already give the notice the bill requires. The requirement that they all do so is as modest as it would be benign. Both business and labor lobbyists have pumped it up into something it is not. The political calendar has helped them, but this provision neither threatens nor will save American civilization as we know it.

Today, we are voting on two important pieces of legislation—the trade bill and the plant closing notification bill. The first is important for what it will do for U.S. trade policy. As separate legislation, the second is important because it enables the first bill to become law.

We should approve this bill not only because it is perceived as equitable by the American people, but also because it removes the barrier in Congress which is currently preventing the passage of the more important and much-needed trade bill.

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, plant closing and layoff notification is a well intentioned, seemingly compassionate idea. However, it spells surrender for employees across the country. The concept of notification is excellent and, indeed, the vast majority of American companies do give adequate closing or relocation notification to employees.

Mandated notification, on the other hand, can actually guarantee that a plant will close by denying the company access to the many resources and options available to prevent this from occurring. Simply put, the company will have no other option than to admit defeat and layoff its employees. The employees will have to surrender right along with the company.

I think it is important to walk through the real consequences of mandated notification. When company A gives public notification about a possible closing, the clearest message is sent to the financial community; namely, its bank or lending institution. That message says that the plant can no longer carry debt, that it can no longer borrow—a key to survival. The next to hear the message are the company's customers. They hear it slightly differently, though, they hear that they ought to immediately begin looking for other suppliers. The company's competition is not far behind. How long do you suppose it takes them swoop in like vultures, biting at the heads of this closing facility? Last, but in no way least, comes the suppliers to company A, who will suspend credit and begin requiring COD on everything from raw materials to paper towels. Let's not fool ourselves, in business there are very few second chances. With mandated advance plant closing and layoff notification there could be no second chances.

And what about Government support? Municipalities, State governments and other development support groups, such as the Small Business Administration, cannot help ailing facilities without the flexibility of banks, creditors, employees and suppliers. Company A's only course of action, close the plant and lay off the workers.

I am not willing to raise the white flag when a company is in financial trouble. Giving mandated advance notification eliminates flexibility and eliminates the possibility of keeping employees' jobs. And that is what this is supposed to be all about. I want to stay and fight for every chance of keeping the company open, and keeping the jobs intact.

Even with mandated advance notification there is no penalty against companies for failure to comply. The bad apples in business and industry will still give 1 day's notification. Those companies will soon pay the price for their insensitivity, but let's not penalize everyone just to make a point. So let's help the vast majority of companies that do want to stay afloat, the vast majority that want to explore all the options and want the flexibility to keep jobs rather than waving the white flag.

The worst part about federally mandated advance notification of plant closings and layoffs is that it is a tragic example of political expediency. The reasonable and evolving approach to this issue taken by both labor and management had the rug pulled out from under it. The past decade is replete with examples of Congress wresting complex issues away from the experts and those intimately involved with the issue and sacrificing them on the political altar. So, too, will be the fate of advance notification of plant closings and layoffs if the House passes such legislation.

The rights of the working man, and I agree that the full range of those rights have yet to be guaranteed in every part of our country, have come a long way. At the same time, we must recognize that advances in workers' rights are thanks to tough, but determined negotiating between labor and management. If advance plant closing and layoff notification is ever expected to claim a permanent place in the American workplace, it too will have to undergo the maturing process of bargaining and negotiation. Federal mandates cause the lines between labor and management to become more drawn, more antagonistic and only hurt the workers they are meant to help. Labor and management have never found an issue over which no compromise could be found. Why must Congress assume that advance notification is any different?

The only answer available is political expediency. With advance plant closing and layoff notification we do have one reason to congratulate our sense of equity. With this bill both labor and management will suffer, no one, but a few political egos will gain from this legislation. For the sanctity of the American workplace and our economic well-being, vote "no" on this bill.

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to S. 2527. As a businessman, I am well aware that providing advanced warning of closings and layoffs is part of a sound business policy. In my district in Oregon, we witnessed this firsthand when Caterpillar decided to close its plant in Dallas. There, the workers were given more than 2 years notice, providing both themselves and the community ample opportunity to plan for the future. Clearly, it would be in everyone's best interests if all businesses would adopt this sort of policy.

It should be equally clear, however, that this policy should be worked out between management and labor, and not be imposed by the Federal Government. By interfering in an area where it does not belong, S. 2527 will further turn the relationship between management and labor into an adversarial one, and adversely affect the economy in several ways, all while doing nothing to save or create jobs.

It must be noted that the bill's scope is much broader than simply large plants. Restaurants, small contractors, supermarkets and other small- to medium-sized businesses will be included as well. In a quickly changing business environment, managers of businesses like these must have the ability to make decisions without being burdened by government regulations. This legislation will discourage managers from taking actions that can keep their businesses open, and it will discourage both the opening of new businesses and the expansion of existing ones. It will cause businesses to lose lines of credit, suppliers, customers, and key personnel during the notification period. The final result will be a substantially decreased ability to compete at a time when the trade deficit is finally beginning to come down.

I feel strongly that the motives behind this bill are political, not economical. The economy is good. Besides better trade numbers, the layoff rate is at its lowest level in 20 years, there are 6 plant openings to every plant closing today, and we have created more than 14 million jobs since 1982. S. 2527, far from being protection for American workers, is nothing more than an election year issue for the Democrats.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, today we are going to vote on legislation designed to give workers 60 days' advance notice of certain plant closings or mass layoffs.

This bill requires employers with 100 or more full-time employees to give 60-day advance notice of certain plant closings and mass layoffs. For mass layoffs, notice would be required for layoffs of more than 6 months if the layoff affects 50 or more employees constituting at least 33 percent of the work force at any site, or for any 6-month layoff affecting 500 workers regardless of whether they constitute 33 percent of the work force.

For many areas in this Nation, this bill is too little, too late. Fortunately, we can all learn from mistakes and the heartbreaks of the past. If an economic situation should arise which again raises the ugly specter of distressed industries and depressed markets, this bill will help ease any transitions which might be needed to weather the situation.

The General Accounting Office recently did a study which indicated that on the average, businesses provided only 7 days' advanced notice to workers that they would be losing their jobs. It also discovered that about one-third of businesses gave no notice whatsoever, and nearly two-thirds gave 2-weeks or less. This is just plain wrong. It is wrong for the workers who are employed by these businesses and it is wrong for the communities that contain these businesses and rely upon them for their economic vitality.

This bill will go a long way toward providing fair warning to those employees and communities affected by massive layoffs. With advanced notice, workers will have an opportunity to find other alternatives, whether it be another job or some type of retraining program. In essence, it allows the worker to be unemployed for a shorter period of time.

From an economic standpoint, communities that are faced with the possibility of losing the incomes supported by workers wages can now have time to find businesses willing to come into the areas. Local governments, whose tax base may decrease from sudden layoffs, now can be provided with time to reassess their situation.

The bill does exempt some plant-closing notifications that result from natural disasters or business circumstances not reasonably foreseen at the time notice would have been required. An excellent example is if your major supplier was suddenly unable to fill your contract as a result of a disastrous fire, natural disaster, or the unforeseen lack of an important resource, then obviously, no work would be available to your employees. This feature is of particular importance to the small businessman who might rely on a small number of customers or a small number of suppliers.

Additionally, this bill exempts "faltering companies" seeking capital or business to avoid a shutdown, as well as closings and layoffs from temporary projects, where workers knew their employment was temporary. Seasonal employees, such as those who have been hired for a summer job, or to handle the unusually heavy workload during the Christmas season can be categorized into this situation.

Finally, those employers who fail to provide notice, and were required to do so, would be liable for monetary damages to those employees who were entitled to receive notice. Overall, this legislation is fair. It does not place unreasonable burdens on small business and any other business, and it gives those most immediately and adversely affected time to find adequate alternatives.

This legislation is fair, it is timely, and I am proud that this Congress has finally recognized the importance of this issue. Think how much this will mean to workers across the land and how much better prepared this Nation will be if, at some unforeseen time in the future, we have to again endure the unprecedented number of plant closings we had during the early 1980's.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, 2 weeks ago the Clinton Garment Factory in my district shut its doors. There was no notice given to the workers. I was angry. The actions of the owners of that plant were despicable.

My initial reaction to the news was this: I'll right this wrong by passing legislation.

But then somewhere in the back of my mind I head the voice of an old priest who used to rattle around the halls of Loras College in Dubuque, Iowa. He'd say:

> "The road to hell is paved with good intentions."

And that sums up the problem with this bill.

The intentions of its supporters are wonderful. They have a goal we all share: to treat workers fairly, to give them a decent notice of a plant closing or layoff.

But while we must fight for that goal, it's clear that good intentions and a worthy goal are not sufficient to make good policy. And the policy contained in this bill is a "road to hell" that is "paved with good intentions" for workers.

While the intention is to help workers, the effect of this legislation will be just the opposite—it will hurt workers.

It's doubtful that this bill would have done anything for my constituents at the Clinton Garment Company. It's clear that it would have hurt thousands of others had it been in effect during the recent farm crisis in Iowa.

The fundamental problem with the bill is this: it essentially prohibits a private employer from imposing a necessary partial layoff in order to keep a plant open and save the jobs of other workers. Asmuch as they hurt, those layoffs enabled businesses to tighten their belts, restructure to weather the economic storm, then hire those employees back again. But if this bill becomes law, a business that loses a Government contract (and the Federal Government gives no notice), loses a big customer, or suffers a major shift in the market due to something like the farm crisis will face an impossible dilemma. If the business follows the law and keeps everybody on the payroll for 60 days, it could go bankrupt. As soon as it gives notice, creditors would swoop down like vultures and destroy any chance of the wounded business to survive. All the workers would be hurt.

But if the business takes quick action to try to survive and preserve the jobs of as many workers as possible, it faces costly litigation and possible violations of the law.

So I suggest to my colleagues—if you want more plant closings, vote for this bill. If you want fewer workers, vote for this bill. Because, despite the good intentions, the substance of this bill paves a "road to hell" for workers in small factories and shops across America."

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield my remaining 2½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the distinguished chairman of the Education and Labor Committee.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I would like to take this time to express appreciation to the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLAY, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations for the great leadership that he has given to this issue; also to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BILL FORD, who introduced the first plant-closing bill back in 1974. And I would also like to express my appreciation to the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. JEFFORDS, the ranking Republican member on the committee, for his support of this proposal.

I do not know what we are really doing. In a way we are playing games with the American people, certainly with ourselves, in a way. Twice we have voted this overwhelmingly for advanced notification. Subsequently the Senate has also voted for advanced notification. Unfortunately, between those times the President vetoed the proposal which necessitated this back-and-forth game.

So it is nothing new that we are dealing with today, it is something with which we are very familiar. It is something which has had extensive hearings. There is nothing unusual about it.

As a matter of fact, this country happens to be one of the few, one of the unique countries in the free world that refuses in a sense to give such notification. All of the countries of the European Common Market have seen fit to do this. Japan, one of our strong competitors, even has a more extensive provision requiring as much time as possible, together with a wage subsidy in the event that no other benefit can accrue. So it seems to me we are not marching in step with anyone. Our neighbor to the north, Canada, has had this notification, and it has proven very successful.

So it seems to me that we are facing the inevitable consequence of what are we going to do to give to our work force in America, the men and women fortunate enough to have jobs, who are producing the revenues that make our country prosperous, whether or not we are going to be humane and give them some adequate notice so that they and the businesses for which they work have an opportunity to prevent the closing up of a business and the disruption of a community. It is just as simple as that, and it seems to me that all the rest is political rhetoric that we should dispense with and get on with the business of providing what is a simple notification.

I therefore suggest that my colleagues should join in approving today S. 2527 so that at last we may be able to send to the President for his approval what is a simple act of justice.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The text of S. 2527 is as follows:

S. 2527

Sec. 3. Notice required before plant closings and mass layoffs.

Sec. 4. Exemptions.

Sec. 5. Administration and enforcement of requirements.

Sec. 6. Procedures in addition to other rights of employees.

Sec. 7. Procedures encouraged where not required.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS; EXCLUSIONS FROM DEFINITION OF LOSS OF EMPLOYMENT.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this Act—

(1) the term "employer" means any business enterprise that employs—

(A) 100 or more employees, excluding part-time employees; or

(B) 100 or more employees who in the aggregate work at least 4,000 hours per week (exclusive of hours of overtime);

(2) the term "plant closing" means the permanent or temporary shutdown of a single site of employment, or one or more facilities or operating units within a single site of employment, if the shutdown results in an employment loss at the single site of employment during any 30-day period for 50 or more employees excluding any part-time employees;

(3) the term "mass layoff" means a reduction in force which—

(A) is not the result of a plant closing; and

(B) results in an employment loss at the single site of employment during any 30-day period for—

(i)(I) at least 33 percent of the employees (excluding any part-time employees); and

(II) at least 50 employees (excluding any part-time employees); or

(ii) at least 500 employees (excluding any part-time employees);

(4) the term "representative" means an exclusive representative of employees within the meaning of section 9(a) or 8(f) of the National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 159(a), 158(f)) or section 2 of the Railway Labor Act (45 U.S.C. 152);

(5) the term "affected employees" means employees who may reasonably be expected to experience an employment loss as a consequence of a proposed plant closing or mass layoff by their employer;

(6) subject to subsection (b), the term "employment loss" means (A) an employment termination, other than a discharge for cause, voluntary departure, or retirement, (B) a layoff exceeding 6 months, or (C) a reduction in hours of work of more than 50 percent during each month of any 6-month period;

(7) the term "unit of local government" means any general purpose political subdivision of a State which has the power to levy taxes and spend funds, as well as general corporate and police powers; and

(8) the term "part-time employee" means an employee who is employed for an average of fewer than 20 hours per week or who has been employed for fewer than 6 of the 12 months preceding the date on which notice is required.

(b) EXCLUSIONS FROM DEFINITION OF EMPLOYMENT LOSS.—(1) In the case of a sale of part or all of an employer's business, the seller shall be responsible for providing notice for any plant closing or mass layoff in accordance with section 3 of this Act, up to and including the effective date of the sale. After the effective date of the sale of part or all of an employer's business, the purchaser shall be responsible for providing notice for any plant closing or mass layoff in accordance with section 3 of this Act. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, any person who is an employee of the seller (other than a part-time employee) as of the effective date of the sale shall be considered an employee of the purchaser immediately after the effective date of the sale.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (a)(6), an employee may not be considered to have experienced an employment loss if the closing or layoff is the result of the relocation or consolidation of part or all of the employer's business and, prior to the closing or layoff—

(A) the employer offers to transfer the employee to a different site of employment within a reasonable commuting distance with no more than a 6-month break in employment; or

(B) the employer offers to transfer the employee to any other site of employment regardless of distance with no more than a 6-month break in employment, and the employee accepts within 30 days of the offer or of the closing or layoff, whichever is later.

SEC. 3. NOTICE REQUIRED BEFORE PLANT CLOSINGS AND MASS LAYOFFS.

(a) NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES, STATE DISLOCATED WORKER UNITS, AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.—An employer shall not order a plant closing or mass layoff until the end of a 60-day period after the employer serves written notice of such an order—

(1) to each representative of the affected employees as of the time of the notice or, if there is no such representative at that time, to each affected employee; and

(2) to the State dislocated worker unit (designated or created under title III of the Job Training Partnership Act) and the chief elected official of the unit of local government within which such closing or layoff is to occur.

If there is more than one such unit, the unit of local government which the employer shall notify is the unit of local government to which the employer pays the highest taxes for the year preceding the year for which the determination is made.

(b) REDUCTION OF NOTIFICATION PERIOD.—(1) An employer may order the shutdown of a single site of employment before the conclusion of the 60-day period if as of the time that notice would have been required the employer was actively seeking capital or business which, if obtained, would have enabled the employer to avoid or postpone the shutdown and the employer reasonably and in good faith believed that giving the notice required would have precluded the employer from obtaining the needed capital or business.

(2)(A) An employer may order a plant closing or mass layoff before the conclusion of the 60-day period if the closing or mass layoff is caused by business circumstances that were not reasonably foreseeable as of the time that notice would have been required.

(B) No notice under this Act shall be required if the plant closing or mass layoff is due to any form of natural disaster, such as a flood, earthquake, or the drought currently ravaging the farmlands of the United States.

(3) An employer relying on this subsection shall give as much notice as is practicable and at that time shall give a brief statement of the basis for reducing the notification period.

(c) EXTENSION OF LAYOFF PERIOD.—A layoff of more than 6 months which, at its outset, was announced to be a layoff of 6 months or less, shall be treated as an employment loss under this Act unless—

(1) the extension beyond 6 months is caused by business circumstances (including unforeseeable changes in price or cost) not reasonably foreseeable at the time of the initial layoff; and

(2) notice is given at the time it becomes reasonably foreseeable that the extension beyond 6 months will be required.

(d) DETERMINATIONS WITH RESPECT TO EMPLOYMENT LOSS.—For purposes of this section, in determining whether a plant closing or mass layoff has occurred or will occur, employment losses for 2 or more groups at a single site of employment, each of which is less than the minimum number of employees specified in section 2(a) (2) or (3) but which in the aggregate exceed that minimum number, and which occur within any 90-day period shall be considered to be a plant closing or mass layoff unless the employer demonstrates that the employment losses are the result of separate and distinct actions and causes and are not an attempt by the employer to evade the requirements of this Act.

SEC. 4. EXEMPTIONS.

This Act shall not apply to a plant closing or mass layoff if—

(1) the closing is of a temporary facility or the closing or layoff is the result of the completion of a particular project or undertaking, and the affected employees were hired with the understanding that their employment was limited to the duration of the facility or the project or undertaking; or

(2) the closing or layoff constitutes a strike or constitutes a lockout not intended to evade the requirements of this Act. Nothing in this Act shall require an employer to serve written notice pursuant to section 3(a) of this Act when permanently replacing a person who is deemed to be an economic striker under the National Labor Relations Act: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall be deemed to validate or invalidate any judicial or administrative ruling relating to the hiring of permanent replacements for economic strikers under the National Labor Relations Act.

SEC. 5. ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT OF REQUIREMENTS.

(a) CIVIL ACTIONS AGAINST EMPLOYERS.—(1) Any employer who orders a plant closing or mass layoff in violation of section 3 of this Act shall be liable to each aggrieved employee who suffers an employment loss as a result of such closing or layoff for—

(A) back pay for each day of violation at a rate of compensation not less than the higher of—

(i) the average regular rate received by such employee during the last 3 years of the employee's employment; or

(ii) the final regular rate received by such employee; and

(B) benefits under an employee benefit plan described in section 3(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(3)), including the cost of medical expenses incurred during the employment loss which would have been covered under an employee benefit plan if the employment loss had not occurred.

Such liability shall be calculated for the period of the violation, up to a maximum of 60 days, but in no event for more than one-half the number of days the employee was employed by the employer.

(2) The amount for which an employer is liable under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by—

(A) any wages paid by the employer to the employee for the period of the violation;

(B) any voluntary and unconditional payment by the employer to the employee that is not required by any legal obligation; and

(C) any payment by the employer to a third party or trustee (such as premiums for health benefits or payments to a defined contribution pension plan) on behalf of and attributable to the employee for the period of the violation.

In addition, any liability incurred under paragraph (1) with respect to a defined benefit pension plan may be reduced by crediting the employee with service for all purposes under such a plan for the period of the violation.

(3) Any employer who violates the provisions of section 3 with respect to a unit of local government shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $500 for each day of such violation, except that such penalty shall not apply if the employer pays to each aggrieved employee the amount for which the employer is liable to that employee within 3 weeks from the date the employer orders the shutdown or layoff.

(4) If an employer which has violated this Act proves to the satisfaction of the court that the act or omission that violated this Act was in good faith and that the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that the act or omission was not a violation of this Act the court may, in its discretion, reduce the amount of the liability or penalty provided for in this section.

(5) A person seeking to enforce such liability, including a representative of employees or a unit of local government aggrieved under paragraph (1) or (3), may sue either for such person or for other persons similarly situated, or both, in any district court of the United States for any district in which the violation is alleged to have occurred, or in which the employer transacts business.

(6) In any such suit, the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing party a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs.

(7) For purposes of this subsection, the term, "aggrieved employee" means an employee who has worked for the employer ordering the plant closing or mass layoff and who, as a result of the failure by the employer to comply with section 3, did not receive timely notice either directly or through his or her representative as required by section 3.

(b) EXCLUSIVITY OF REMEDIES.—The remedies provided for in this section shall be the exclusive remedies for any violation of this Act. Under this Act, a Federal court shall not have authority to enjoin a plant closing or mass layoff.

SEC. 6. PROCEDURES IN ADDITION TO OTHER RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES.

The rights and remedies provided to employees by this Act are in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other contractual or statutory rights and remedies of the employees, and are not intended to alter or affect such rights and remedies, except that the period of notification required by this Act shall run concurrently with any period of notification required by contract or by any other statute.

SEC. 7. PROCEDURES ENCOURAGED WHERE NOT REQUIRED.

It is the sense of Congress that an employer who is not required to comply with the notice requirements of section 3 should, to the extent possible, provide notice to its employees about a proposal to close a plant or permanently reduce its workforce.

SEC. 8. AUTHORITY TO PRESCRIBE REGULATIONS.

(a) The Secretary of Labor shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this Act. Such regulations shall, at a minimum, include interpretative regulations describing the methods by which employers may provide for appropriate service of notice as required by this Act.

(b) The mailing of notice to an employee's last known address or inclusion of notice in the employee's paycheck will be considered acceptable methods for fulfillment of the employer's obligation to give notice to each affected employee under this Act.

SEC. 9. EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.

The giving of notice pursuant to this Act, if done in good faith compliance with this Act, shall not constitute a violation of the National Labor Relations Act or the Railway Labor Act.

SEC. 10. REPORT ON EMPLOYMENT AND INTERNATIONAL COMPETITIVENESS.

Two years after the date of enactment of this Act the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Small Business of both the House and Senate, the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, and the Committee on Education and Labor a report containing a detailed and objective analysis of the effect of this Act on employers (especially small- and medium-sized businesses), the economy (international competitiveness), and employees (in terms of levels and conditions of employment). The Comptroller General shall assess both costs and benefits, including the effect on productivity, competitiveness, unemployment rates and compensation, and worker retraining and readjustment.

SEC. 11. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect on the date which is 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, except that the authority of the Secretary of Labor under section 8 is effective upon enactment.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendments to the bill are in order except an amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 12, 1988 by, and if offered by, Representative MICHEL or his designee. Said amendment is not subject to amendment and is debatable for 60 minutes, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a Member opposed thereto.

Is any Member present who wishes to offer that amendment?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that no amendment will be offered from this side.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MURTHA] having assumed the chair, Mr. GLICKMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the Senate bill (S. 2527) to require advance notification of plant closings and mass layoffs, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 491 he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 286, nays 136, not voting 9, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent during the vote on final passage of the plant-closing bill, rollcall No. 229. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on final passage.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent during the vote on final passage of the plant-closing bill, rollcall No. 229. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

OMNIBUS TRADE AND COMPETITIVENESS ACT OF 1988

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 491 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4848.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4848) to enhance the competitiveness of American industry, and for other purposes, with Mr. BEILENSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 1 hour and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of this landmark legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this is the last time I will stand before this House and urge adoption of the omnibus trade bill. After a long and tedious process, I sense that we are at last approaching the final act in this drama. I think that we can now say with some degree of confidence that the Nation will soon have a new trade policy which it desperately needs.

Mr. Chairman, I can't overemphasize the importance of enacting this essential trade bill into law. As we speak, there's a flurry of activity among Japanese business leaders to figure out how to derail this bill. The day I reintroduced the trade bill—the Japanese Embassy was calling to find out how many cosponsors I had. They wanted to know if the administration would support the new bill. They wanted to know if there would be enough Republican opposition to sustain a second veto.

My point in relating these events is a simple one. What's at stake here is nothing less than our credibility in the world. Year after year, we pass trade bills that for one reason or another don't go anywhere. It has become an international joke. Those foreign business interests and governments who don't want to see us unify around a new trade policy know very well how to forestall legislative initiatives.

For the first time, we can defeat those who want to see American trade policy fail. For the first time, we have an opportunity to bring about a real change in the way our policies are decided and carried out. This bill represents a fundamental change, but it is one that is fair and responsible. It is a policy the world can understand, and one that the world must respect. It rejects protectionism, but forces others to make their own markets more open and fair.

But if we fail once again to do anything, we reinforce the image of America as a weak economic power. The consequences of failure will be severe, and all of us here will be partly to blame.

We are now approaching an era of great promise for U.S. exports. Our trade deficit must turn around. The dollar is low, our industries have made huge leaps in productivity, and the quality of our products has improved. We now stand poised to capture new markets all around the globe. But if we do not show our trading partners that we will take a tough stance against any protectionist actions, American business will be reluctant to spend the resources necessary to develop those export markets. If that occurs, the American export boom will wither and die.

The best protection for our economic future is this trade bill. It has many features to help our exports and our overall competitiveness. But more important than that, it is the insurance policy that American businesses need to convince them to fight for overseas markets. This new trade law tells them that if they produce quality products their government will stand behind them to get a fair shake in world trade.

I know there is a lot more to do in the future if this country is to recapture its title as the world's economic leader. Most of all, we need the courage to face up to our budget deficit. But I believe that our persistence and determination to improve our outdated trade policy will stand as a powerful signal—a signal that this country will be a forceful but fair leader in the search for open and expanded world trade.

Today the Congress sends a notice to the world and to the American people. We will not rest until this Nation has returned to prominence as a great trading nation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, we have been working on this bill for 4 years. It perished at the end of the 99th Congress over in the Senate. It was revitalized in this Congress, and it has wended its way forward to this point.

I agree with the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], that we now stand on the brink of enactment, and it seems that there is an excellent chance to have the bill enacted.

First I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I am not a great fan of this bill. I find more measures that tend to shrink trade in this bill than expand trade, and yet the worst of the offensive protectionist measures have been taken out in the conference committee.

There are some important, positive factors. The most important is the negotiating authority for our country to go forward with its leadership in the Uraguayan round of multinational negotiations in the GATT.

Another important positive element is the harmonized customs code which will put the United States back into the world from which we have receeded this year.

There are also improvements in the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act and in the implementation of the Export Administration Act with are necessary.

Certain other features of the bill such as those that are intended to protect intellectual properties are a must as well.

Most of the changes in our trade law, however, were designed to help people who had made complaints in the past and had not had a sufficient case to sustain those complaints under our law. Particularly offensive to me is the super 301 section that began in the Senate bill and remains in this bill.

In addition, we have added three new clauses for action under section 301 that are not recognized under international law. Those new causes, if used, are going to be retaliated against by any of our trading partners under the GATT. In that case we shall be at least at some risk of starting a minor international trade altercation.

There are other problems of sectorial reciprocity and the fact that we have created a new entitlement for trade adjustment assistance which is unwarranted and expensive.

But, as one looks at the bill overall, one must make a judgment. In a vacuum I would not vote for this bill because it is not overall good trade policy. Under the conditions in which we are operating I am going to vote for the bill.

The reasons are, of course, there are positive things that are necessary, but more important, no new administration, be it BUSH or Dukakis, should have to arm wrestle with the Congress for another 2 years over trade policy that we have spent 4 years building.

Mr. Chairman, we ought to make decisions now. We ought to get this law on the books. A clever administration with competent people, I hope, will be able to stay out of trouble due to the positive changes made in the conference committee in both the House and Senate bills.

It is a close call. Other things being equal, I would not recommend that we vote for this bill. However, under the circumstances, because we are not likely to get a better bill in the future and the fact that it is very important that a new administration be able to concentrate all its energies on reducing the deficit, which is the real priority problem rather than fooling with trade policy in the future, I recommend an affirmative vote on this bill. I hope that it is passed.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, one of the best reasons for enacting the trade bill before the House is to demonstrate to our trading partners that we are committed to ensuring that U.S. firms can operate fairly in foreign markets. As the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is well aware, section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974, which was extensively revised by his committee in this bill, is the primary statutory authority through which U.S. firms challenge unfair foreign practices.

An unfortunate situation in Argentina has come to my attention. I would like to describe that situation and then inquire of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee as to whether he believes it would be possible to address this problem under section 301 as it has been revised in the trade bill.

An American firm entered into a joint venture with a firm in Argentina. This joint venture then contracted to perform services for a municipal authority. Their performance over the last 8 years continues and is not in dispute. Unfortunately, however, the municipality has not performed on its end of the contract. It is unilaterally refusing to pay for a portion of the services performed.

This refusal stems from Argentina's economic reform program called the Austral plan of June 1985, which created a new currency and so forced the recalculation of many existing contracts with public authorities. Argentine authorities have renegotiated their contracts with Argentine firms and indeed with other multinationals, but in this case the municipal authority has refused all efforts to negotiate with the American company, even refusing the arbitration called for in the contract.

While this American firm wants to negotiate a settlement, my understanding is that the U.S. firm could take action against this unfair and discriminatory behavior by filing a petition under section 301 and seeking to have the U.S. Government employ whatever means available to encourage the municipality to meet its contractual obligations. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. If the gentleman will yield, he is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], chairman of the Subcommittee on Trade of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, this is the fourth, or fifth or sixth trip this bill or a very similar bill has made through the House of Representatives, and this challenges everyone's ingenuity to try to say something new and something exciting or something startling about this bill.

But this is a good bill. During different times of its life it has had different reputations. It now ends up with a very good reputation.

Mr. Chairman, I think the most important part about this bill is that it provides for the President of the United States, whoever he may be, ample authority to negotiate on the behalf of the United States to reduce trade barriers around the world and open up trade opportunities for American concerns and American labor. It is an absolutely essential bill as far as the United States is concerned and as far as the world is concerned because without our leadership no trade negotiations will go forward. The world will slip backward. It will slip into import substitution types of economies, become inefficient, kick off another round of world inflation and have all that disorder and political instability that follows:

So, Mr. Chairman, this is an absolutely essential piece of legislation, not just for the United States, but for the whole world.

Now that is a sobering thought, but it is a realistic thought, and it is what we are talking about here today.

Other parts of the bill have been covered amply by my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], but I think it would be appropriate here to say something about the bill.

Yes, it will set some new courses of action for the United States as far as trade is concerned. It will mean that the rules of trade will be much more definitized and will be much more committed to law rather than to practice. And I believe in a rule of law. I think all of us do who had experience in the workings of the law and the workings of the Government that a rule of law is far better than a rule of man.

Mr. Chairman, in some ways it exceeds the boundaries of the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade, and it does so deliberately. The General Agreement on Tariff and Trade is an old document having come about at the end of World War II when all the rest of the world was prostrate and had very little industrial capacity and had no surpluses. The United States had an excellent industrial capacity, and even though it had shortages, it was a world leader. It could afford to be generous, and it was generous in the rebuilding of the economies of Europe and of Asia, and it did it at quite an expense to us.

Mr. Chairman, those days have long gone. The United States is now a debtor nation. It is a debtor nation in that we absorb much more in imports than we are able to export.

To some extent this is our fault, but much of it is caused by the rules of trade that we look at here today. Much of what has happened was caused by a misvalued currency that was deliberately set up during the Bretton Woods agreement in order to try to get Europe and Asia back on their feet, in order to make them try to rebuild their industries and export their products to this country. That worked. It worked too well, and we did not repeal it in time.

But, Mr. Chairman, the damage has been done, and that is largely behind us now with our new floating currency.

We made some domestic mistakes. We have overconsumed and underproduced here for a long time, and we are paying that penalty. This bill is not going to right all the problems, but it is an essential part in writing the problems that we now face. This country cannot do without this legislation.

Now there are those who say that we should not exceed the boundaries of the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade, and I say to them, "I don't mind exceeding the boundaries of the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade if we are acting as a responsible leader in trying to set better rules for that." The rules of the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade are almost unanimous consent rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] has expired.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, these rules are the minimum that the world can get by with. We have committed ourselves for many, many years to get rid of injurious subsidies, and we have signed all kinds of agreements to get rid of injurious subsidies, but we have failed to get rid of those subsidies. This bill will make it much tougher to send their subsidized goods into the U.S. market.

Let me remind all of those who are listening and who read these remarks that this is not a new beginning in subsidies. It is a continuation of the solemn commitment that we made almost 40 years ago on subsidies and that we have failed to carry out. Subsidies hold the potential of wrecking the world trade system. They can take the place and will take the place of ad valorem tariffs and other trade barriers unless we get rid of them. So this bill is very strong in its actions against subsidies.

Now let me touch just a little bit on the motion to recommit. As I see it, there is no need to recommit this bill. The provisions on ethanol in this bill are fair. They were agreed to by the administration. In fact, they were put into the bill at the suggestion of the administration. I was personally present and took part in all of that negotiation.

Mr. Chairman, it is a shame that we would think in this time of shortages of grains of turning grains into a substitute for gasoline and at the same time punish those in the Caribbean who can exchange excess products from other parts of the world into a substitute for gasoline.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to address briefly the trade bill provision on domestic subsidies. Section 1312 of H.R. 4848 is identical to section 1312 of the conference report on H.R. 3, which was approved by both the House and the Senate in April of this year. This provision on actionable domestic subsidies, commonly referred to as the "general availability" provision, appeared in almost identical form in both the House- and Senate-passed versions of H.R. 3. The purpose of the provision is to correct problems with different interpretations by the administering authority of the general availability concept.

Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the House Ways and Means Subcommittee on Trade, original author of the general availability provision, and coauthor of the conference agreement, I can unequivocally state that the general availability provision was intended to codify the Court of International Trade's decision rejecting the administering authority's then-existing interpretation of section 771(5)(B) of the Tariff Act of 1930 in Cabot Corporation v. United States, 620 F. Supp. 722 (CIT 1985). Indeed, the Ways and Means Committee report (H. Rept. No. 100–40, Pt. 1, 100th Cong., 1st sess. 124 (1987)) clearly states the committee's intent to codify the Cabot rule requiring the examination of whether competitive benefits are conferred by a government program on identifiable recipients—as opposed to society at large. In my judgment, the Senate report (S. Rept. No. 100–71, 100th Cong., 1st sess. 123 (1987)) also clearly embraced the Cabot rule.

I would also like the record to reflect clearly that neither the House language on general availability nor the similar language in the Senate bill codified or addressed post-Cabot decisions of the Court of International Trade. The conference committee, as indicated in the conference report, intended to codify Cabot but did not address any later-issued rulings such PPG Industries, Inc. v. United States, 662 F. Supp. 258 (CIT 1987). I note that the author of the Senate provisions has expressed the same understanding of the conference language (134 Cong. Rec. S. 4914 (daily ed. Apr. 27, 1988) (statement of Hon. MAX BAUCUS)).

Finally, the managers adopted conference report language accompanying the provision on domestic subsidies which directs the USTR to identify—through the ITC—and address investment barriers which have the effect of preventing U.S. industries from claiming the benefit of a foreign government program on the same terms as domestic capital.

The principle underlying this provision is quite simple: A government which creates an advantage for its domestic industries through a government program and then denies that advantage to U.S. persons through investment restrictions is engaged in a discriminatory and unreasonable unfair trade practice cognizable under section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974.

The conference report directs USTR to self-initiate section 301 cases to address the practices identified in the ITC report which the U.S. Trade Representative determines most adversely affect U.S. industries. This represents a congressional mandate to take action to address these practices but gives discretion to determine which cases are most "egregious" and have the most adverse impact on U.S. industries.

Mr. Chairman, it is no secret that the situation giving rise to this conference report language is Mexico's investment regime as it applies to foreign access to Mexican natural resources. Mexico maintains a dual pricing scheme for its natural resources whereby the export price is above the domestic price for those resources. In this setting, investment restrictions reserve for Mexican capital the full advantage conferred by the lower domestic price for Mexican natural resources.

I would expect the ITC study to be thorough and comprehensive. I would anticipate that a significant portion of the ITC study will focus on investment barriers as they apply to the exploitation of natural resources. For the Mexican case may not be unique, and we will, sooner or later, be obliged to come to grips with unreasonable and discriminatory foreign practices involving natural resource-based industries.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 4848, the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988. While none of us finds this bill 100 percent to our satisfaction, it is on balance as good a trade bill as could be expected from this Congress and it will go a long way toward solving our current trade maladies. Moreover, those provisions which have thus far stood in its way have been removed and it should now be acceptable to all parties.

Let me just address those provisions that are closest to me—that is, those which were produced in the House by the Education and Labor Committee. I believe that the resolution achieved regarding these provisions produced legislation that strengthens our ability to train and educate individuals for participation in this competitive world.

To address our trade problems we have to look beyond the immediate impact of foreign competition. We have to look for ways to address the root causes of our Nation's decline in the international marketplace: A decline in productivity; a slowdown in research and development activities; and the failure of our educational system to produce a work force that meets the needs of an ever-changing global marketplace. We need to look toward the future—to determine what our work force will be like and what sorts of skills will be needed for our country to hold a preeminent place in the world economy.

We need programs that address our students' deficiencies; that equip our workers with basic literacy skills; that assure a computer literate society; and that revitalize our inadequate and outdated scientific research equipment and laboratories. Further, we have to address the retraining and upgrading needs of our current work force. We have to match the training needs of business with the availability of education and training programs. Vocational education and occupational skill programs must be designed to contribute to our economic growth. Ways to combat the needs of the ever increasing dropout population must be implemented. And we should examine whether cooperative efforts by labor and management could improve productivity.

Although there are those who may view an education and training component of a trade bill. As insignificant, I believe that without such programs, no trade bill can produce long-lasting results. Without a better educated, more highly skilled, and more productive work force, America will not be able to hold a leadership role in international commerce.

There are a few provisions in this bill that I believe deserve special note. First, an issue that I have sponsored in the trade bill that we considered not only in this Congress, but in the previous one as well. That is, the issue of revitalizing this Nation's research capacity. In order to begin to reverse our declining research capabilities, this bill contains a Scientific Facilities and Instrumentation Program that will provide resources for our undergraduate and graduate institutions of higher education.

Over the last several years, the necessity for the refurbishing of the college and university infrastructure has become a critical need at American postsecondary institutions. It concerns me that we provide billions of dollars in student financial assistance so that our citizens may gain access to postsecondary education and, when that access is gained, they are educated in facilities and use instrumentation which clearly are not state-of-the-art. It is as much a denial of educational opportunity to use student financial aid to open college doors and train students in inferior facilities, as it is to not open the college doors at all.

Some analysts suggest the total nationwide price tag for replacement and renewal of university facilities, including research laboratories and instrumentation, is between $30 and $40 billion. Twenty of twenty-three universities that participated in a GAO study reported that the inadequacy of present research facilities was a "leading constraint" to the type of research they were currently conducting. We must do better in supporting excellence in our postsecondary education system. From the mid-1960's until the early 1970's Federal funding of university research facilities and instrumentation accounted for 25 to 30 percent of the total expended for those purposes. For the period following World War II, the Federal Government directly supported 65 percent of the cost of instrumentation and 20 percent of the cost of R&D plant.

While I believe that the bill could have gone a lot farther in this area, even the modest steps taken by this bill are crucial. Second, the bill expands and strengthens the dislocated worker training provisions included in the Job Training Partnership Act. Concerns that have been expressed regarding the current law are addressed in this bill. Of particular import was the concern that large amounts of unexpended funds remained in the system despite the growing training needs of this population.

The Worker Readjustment Assistance Program [WRAP] in this bill is very similar to the one proposed by the President. It establishes a shared training system for dislocated workers that follows closely the structure of the basic training service system under JTPA. Greater involvement of substate areas and the private sector is required in addition to the role of the States. A fund recapture and reallotment capability are provided so that States and areas with greater resource needs are eligible to receive additional funds. Most importantly though, is the recognition that if training resources are made available to dislocated workers early on, the greater the chance of continuing their attachment to the labor force.

A key component of the bill is the establishment of a rapid response capability within the Worker Readjustment Assistance Program. Under this provision, any substantial layoff or plant closing would prompt immediate contact from a State dislocated worker unit, which would be identifiable to employers and workers throughout the State.

Among other things, the rapid response team would promote the establishment of labor-management committees at the plant site to coordinate readjustment activities for the affected workers at that plant. This concept is taken from a bill (H.R. 728) I introduced last year that was modeled after the Canadian Industrial Adjustment Service [IAS], which Chairman HAWKINS and I found to be so impressive during our visit to Canada last year.

In the report of the Brock Task Force which was requested by myself, Mrs. ROUKEMA, and Mr. GUNDERSON, the IAS is cited as an effective approach and is singled out among all foreign endeavors studied as the one offering "the highest degree of replicability" in the United States. Like the IAS, the bill offers a simple, low-cost approach which is purely voluntary on the part of employers and workers. In Canada, this program has resulted in estimated savings of $25.5 million, offset by only $9.9 million in Government costs.

These and other components make up a bill which we have all worked long and hard to adapt to our trade needs. Some things were left out that some of us would have liked to have seen included. But, in doing so, we have forged a consensus that I believe represents as good a trade package as this Congress could have produced. I urge my colleagues to vote for the bill.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, today we are at the end of a difficult 3-year process, an attempt to restructure the Nation's trade laws to meet the challenge of a changing international trade environment.

Although we perhaps allowed that process to become more difficult than it needed to be, I believe we should accept the final product.

Certainly H.R. 4848 contains many provisions that I do not particularly care for, or which seem excessive, but those are more than offset by the many more provisions it contains that are important to this Nation's trade future.

Paramount among those which are needed are the provisions extending the negotiating authority of the President to which our subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] just referred. Only with this congressional authority can he continue to negotiate to conclude a variety of future trade agreements, including the Uruguay round of multilateral negotiations.

Additional provisions establish clearly defined goals and objectives for achieving future trade agreements that enhance U.S. economic interests, as well as to provide a fast track legislative procedure for implementation.

The negotiating authorities contained in the bill, and the objectives and procedures underlying them are the heart and soul of this legislation. Importantly, the debate on that issue over the last 2 years has brought Congress, the administration, and American industry, together with a strong consensus about trade priorities for the Uruguay round.

Free and fair trade means jobs and a higher standard of living for all Americans over the long pull.

In my home city of Houston, TX, our port generates roughly one-third of the economic activity and jobs for the area. It is an essential artery of international commerce. Should we at any point move dramatically toward protectionism in this country, most surely that artery would be shut down with the resulting major economic loss to our part of the world; but more importantly, it would be repeated all over the United States of America.

Another important part of this legislation is the language implementing the Harmonized System of Nomenclature for Customs Entry Purposes. This new system was negotiated among more than 50 countries over a 10-year period. Our implementation of the agreement is absolutely essential. It will provide a common description and classification for all articles in world commerce. That will permit importers and exporters to be treated equitably for tariff, statistical, and transportation documentation purposes at any port of entry in any one of the signatory countries.

It is also important that this authority for the Harmonized System be enacted this year, because almost all of the other foreign signatories will have done so by the end of the year, and U.S. products would be placed at a significant disadvantage if we do not act now.

Another important aspect of H.R. 4848 is its provisions that will expand and update our trade laws in order to meet emerging problems in new trade areas—services, telecommunications, investment, and protection of intellectual property rights.

Mr. Chairman, from a personal standpoint, I am delighted by the provision in the legislation repealing the crude oil windfall profit tax. Having worked for so many years to eliminate that impediment to the economic recovery of our energy producing regions to provide badly needed domestic energy for all Americans, I am very pleased that we were able to include repeal in this revised bill.

Overall, I think this omnibus trade bill is a positive step, although it is not a panacea for any competitiveness problems we have been experiencing.

The most significant act Congress and the President can take to improve the trade deficit and provide a healthy environment for competitive U.S. industries is to bring the fiscal deficit of this country under control and to lower the debt itself through responsible budget policies.

I commend our chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] for his leadership in putting together a very difficult bill and for his commitment to its passage.

Mr. Chairman, I urge an "aye" vote on H.R. 4848.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GREGG].

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding me this time. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this bill which comes out of the Ways and Means Committee and I certainly congratulate the chairman of the Subcommittee on Trade, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], and the ranking member on trade and the ranking member on the full committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER].

Mr. Chairman, this bill is an excellent attempt to address the trade problems which our Nation is having. I specifically want to address one area that the bill has taken up, because I believe it is a very positive step and sets out a precedent which I hope will be followed possibly in other industries. This is in the area of telecommunications. This industry, which has a major impact on the productivity and prosperity of New Hampshire, since we have high level of telecommunications industry-related activity, has been closed out of a number of international markets, specifically the markets of West Germany and England, and to some extent the market of Canada, and up until recent times the market of Japan.

It is inappropriate that these foreign markets should be closed to our telecommunications industry, because we have opened our market to their telecommunications products and we are finding in the United States that large amounts of telecommunications products are flowing in here, and thus this bill is drafted in a way to allow us to say to these foreign nations, which are selling their telecommunications products to the United States, that they must open their markets to our telecommunications products. That is only fair. It is a reciprocal approach.

The language says that if these countries fail to open their markets to our telecommunications products, then we can take steps to redress that situation, and if worst comes to worst we can have some sort of reciprocal action foreclosing their products from coming in here.

But that is not the purpose of this section. The purpose of this section is to open up those foreign markets to our telecommunications products. I think that will be a major step forward for the telecommunications industry of the United States, and especially in New Hampshire.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Chairman, let me add my compliments to those that have already been mentioned to the gentleman from Illinois and to the gentleman from Florida, who put together this bill, as well as those on the other side who supported it.

I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that those of us who are interested and care about this trade issue have always been sort of in a dilemma, because there are two problems in the trade area. One is the problem of protectionism, that is, admitting that we cannot compete, telling foreign products that they cannot come here because we cannot do as well as they do, whether it be here or overseas. That is indeed a policy doomed to failure. It is a policy that admits America cannot be a great power any longer. We are not ready to admit that. We will never admit that.

But on the other hand, there is another problem that has plagued this administration, who I have supported in their general free trade policies, and that is the attitude of doing nothing, that if foreign markets do not let our goods in, we have to sit back, shrug our shoulders, and say. "What can we do?"

Well, we can do things, and this trade bill exemplifies what we can do.

The Japanese are no longer laughing at United States complaints about trade barriers. They know now, as we pass this bill, that the U.S. Government is capable and willing to formulate a meaningful and coherent trade policy. That policy is one of free trade, but not naive trade. This bill should convince our trading partners that the price of access to U.S. markets is access to their own markets.

Free trade, after all, is indeed a two-way street. This trade bill insures free trade by giving our government new weapons to open foreign markets and eliminate protectionism abroad.

The trade bill is written to insure equal opportunity to compete to all businesses. That means that if U.S. companies cannot compete, they will lose business and market share. We are willing to accept that result, but our trading partners abroad must be willing to accept identical consequences and the dislocations that economic restructuring brings.

In passing this law, we are saying that America is ready to fight to retain its economic power in the world. The trade bill will promote free trade and insure open markets around the globe.

Again I congratulate the leadership for working out the problems and bringing this effort to fruition. This is a turning point in American trade history and American economic history, and I think it will bode well for the future of America.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is the third time in as many months that I have stood before this body to state my strong support for new trade legislation. This legislation is long overdue and should never have been vetoed. And while the bill alone will not bring our trade deficit under control, it, nevertheless, will correct inequities in trade policies which for too long have hamstrung American business when competing in foreign markets.

H.R. 4848 is identical to H.R. 3 except for the elimination of the two most contentious provisions: the plant closing notification requirement and the export of Alaskan oil provision. In all other respects, the legislation is the same as the conference report which I strongly supported and which the House adopted on April 21 of this year.

H.R. 4848, like its predecessor H.R. 3, is designed to accomplish three general goals: First, open foreign markets; second, improve enforcement of U.S. trade law; and third, eliminate U.S. export disincentives. Because these are not easily attainable goals, Congress has developed very specific changes to U.S. law and Government policy which we think will accomplish the goals. Specifically H.R. 4848 will:

Open markets for our telecommunications industry and establish reciprocity as a standard;

Provide trade adjustment assistance to those industries that are damaged by imports and that can prove they could recover and become competitive again if given short-term assistance;

Redefine "unfair trade practices" to include export targeting;

Increase the responsibilities for the U.S. Trade Representative and give the office new authority to negotiate better trade rules;

Provide better protection of intellectual property rights;

Establish deadlines for ITC actions on behalf of injured U.S. businesses and put teeth into the law for ITC action and appeals;

Increase the penalties for international mismarking of country-of-origin statements;

Expand the President's authority to suspend mergers or takeovers of U.S. firms by foreign nationals in cases where national security would be compromised;

Create trade liaison positions within our Embassies and missions abroad;

In conclusion, free trade is a relic from another age, another world. What the United States must now demand of its trading partners and its trading competitors alike is fair trade—and that means reciprocity. Only when we demand reciprocity will we be able to compete in global markets for new business and jobs! I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4848, the revised omnibus trade bill.

This Member intends to vote for the motion to recommit to support the effort by Representative MICHEL to change the Caribbean ethanol provisions of this bill. However, regardless of the outcome of the vote on the motion to recommit, I intend to support this bill.

I have spoken in favor of this trade bill on several previous occasions; therefore, I intend to keep my remarks brief.

I want to first of all commend the leadership of the House, especially the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], for reintroducing this important and much needed trade bill.

Following the Senate's vote to sustain the President's veto of H.R. 3, many of us who worked on the trade bill, and who wanted to pass trade legislation this year, were concerned that it would be held political hostage to the Presidential elections. Fortunately, this appears now not to be the case.

Amending the trade bill and bringing it back to the floor demonstrates that Congress is serious about addressing our country's trade inbalance. While it is obvious this trade bill is not a panacea for all of our trade problems, it is on balance very good legislation and the best step forward that we can take at this time.

I am sure there are Members of this body who are unhappy that the plant closing and Alaskan oil provisions were deleted from this bill. However, politics is the art of the possible, and if deleting these two provisions will enable this trade bill to become law, then it is a good product for the country.

There are other Members who will continue to argue that the trade bill is protectionistic.

It is not. On the contrary, it will make significant progress in legitimately fighting protectionism used by our trading partners and it reduces the prospects of additional protectionist steps by the U.S. Government or this Congress. It is, importantly, the authorization for the United States full participation in the Uruguay round of GATT.

Indeed, the most notoriously protectionist measure in the bill, added to H.R. 3 on the floor by a close vote, has been jettisoned in conference on the previous trade legislation and is not in this legislation.

Congress is correctly reasserting some of its constitutional responsibilities to regulate foreign commerce.

The trade bill is also market-oriented and it will promote the export of U.S. products.

The trade bill, in summary, is probusiness, prolabor, proexport, and proagriculture, as a matter of fact.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 4848.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time.

Mr. Chairman, a minute ago the gentleman from Florida and I were talking about the history of this bill. It seems that we have been debating trade policy for well over a decade, probably more like 15 years, and we have sent many pieces of legislation on trade to the other body.

We have been actively debating this bill for about 3 years, as I recall, but during the decade of the debate on trade, we have seen our Nation deteriorate financially from the status of a producer-creditor nation to one of becoming a consumer-debtor nation.

Now, we desperately need a trade policy to reverse this disastrous destiny that will cripple our Nation economically.

With a trade deficit of upwards toward $180 billion, the bill that we debate today offers the prospect of reversing that trend so that our Nation can export more and import less.

The bill attempts to create a law that would establish a freer market with lesser barriers and lesser subsidies. On the question of subsidies, I will support the motion to recommit to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] which would address the question, I think, of the unfair subsidies that are created by our trading partners in Western Europe when they produce alcohol at about a $6 a gallon subsidy and sell it to our trading partners in the Caribbean for about 40 cents a gallon.

At the present time our own alcohol fuel industry is fledgling. It is offering the prospect of an alternative source of energy.

We must encourage our own ethanol, anhydrous ethanol, industry. We now need about 1 billion gallons a year. We have less capacity than that, and if your environmental laws change requiring a substitute of anhydrous alcohol for the benzenes and toxins that now pollute the air in places like California and Washington, DC, we must look to a domestic industry, alcohol industry, of about 10 billion gallons per year. This would do wondrous things for our farm economy, reviving those regions of the country, and lessening their dependence on the Federal Treasury for farm subsidies in order to make those programs work.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my colleagues will also support the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] to instruct, which would delete the privileged position that the Caribbean ethanol exporters now have and would permit us to become more competitive in our country on the production of anhydrous alcohol.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 4848, the reincarnation of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act.

It is time to once and for all put this legislation on the books. Enactment of this bill is necessary if America is to return to its proud role as a nation that is a producer and a creditor, rather than one that is a consumer and a debtor.

But achieving that goal will take more than this bill alone.

For one thing, new markets must be found for American agriculture, an industry based on the presumption of export.

Furthermore, we must continue the struggle for energy independence. In May, nearly 44 percent of the petroleum Americans used came from imported oil.

Expanding the use of ethanol-blended fuels in this country will help us lessen our dependence on foreign energy while providing vast new markets for American grain.

In keeping with the spirit of this trade bill, I intend to support the Michel motion to recommit with instructions.

You may have heard about this as the "CBI ethanol issue." Let me make one thing clear: There is nothing wrong with tariff laws that support the development of Caribbean basin agriculture, and a full-scale Caribbean basin ethanol distilling and blending industry. Such development can, and will, contribute to job creation and economic development in the Caribbean basin countries.

But that's not what section 1910 of the bill does.

When you have a local ethanol industry, you take locally produced agricultural products, invest heavily in plant and equipment to distill ethyl alcohol from those farm products, build a tall tower to remove the water from the alcohol so that it can be blended with fuel, and, finally, you blend the alcohol with gasoline to sell to motorists.

Section 1910 encourages a limited number of offshore investors to skip all but the last two steps in that process. They won't invest in job-creating distillation facilities; they will simply buy old, unused wine alcohol sitting in vats in Europe, bring it to the Caribbean to remove the water from it, and send it on its way.

Those investors will have much lower costs of production than operators of full-scale ethanol production facilities, either here or in the Caribbean.

Under section 1910, they can combine that lower cost of production with favorable tariff treatment under the Caribbean Basin Initiative to drastically undercut the price of domestically produced ethanol. Even worse, they can do that without supporting Caribbean agriculture at all and without creating more than a handful of new jobs.

If we allow that, we stop expansion of the U.S. ethanol industry in its tracks. And that would be a serious mistake.

The unfinished business of the seventies and eighties is still before us. We need to find new markets for farmers, stop importing foreign oil, and find a cleaner-burning fuel that will reduce air pollution in America's great cities.

How tragic it will be if, to solve those problems, we turn to the domestic ethanol industry in the 1990's only to find that it was washed away in a flood of cheap European wine alcohol and isn't there any more.

Let's not take that chance. The Michel motion is compatible with the entire thrust of the trade bill. I urge your support of it.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD].

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, my remarks relate only to the intellectual property section of the bill. Many of the provisions contained in this trade bill have been worked out and will go far in making our trade laws more effective. The solution to our trade problems lies in a coordinated effort by the U.S. Government, U.S. industry and our trading partners. The Judiciary Committee worked very hard on the process patent provision of this legislation as well as the reform of the ITC and the strengthening of our market-access provision.

In this regard I would like to commend the gentleman from Wisconsin, BOB KASTENMEIER, who provided the support and leadership in the process patent area without which we would not be here today. I would also like to commend our ranking Republican, the gentleman from New York, HAM FISH, for insisting from the very beginning, that intellectual and industrial property matters be made part of the trade bill. His support and leadership have also been very valuable in bringing this matter to the floor today.

As a nation we have finally become aware of just how important our industrial and intellectual property law is, not only domestically but also internationally. As the largest exporter of industrial and copyrighted works, it only makes sense for the United States to provide American creators and inventors with the best protection available. In a recently released study prepared by the U.S. International Trade Commission, entitled "Foreign Protection of Intellectual Property Rights and the Effect on U.S. Industry and Trade" respondents estimated their aggregate worldwide losses as a result of inadequate intellectual property protection in 1987 at $23.8 billion which can be translated into nearly 300,000 jobs lost for Americans.

We are all aware of the trade deficit and the massive number of foreign-made products coming into this country. People in other countries are using the ingenuity of our inventors to create goods and send those goods into this country to compete with American-made goods and consequently beating us with the use of our own technology. The two provisions contained in the trade bill which came out of the House Judiciary Committee address this problem. One revises the procedures used by the International Trade Commission when considering copyright and patent law violations, and the other deals with process patents which conforms our law with that of most of our trading partners and closes a significant loophole in our patent law.

Under existing conditions, a patent is infringed only if the patented product or process is used, made or sold in the United States. This is sufficient in the case of a product patent because any item produced overseas and sold in the United States effectively infringes on the patent holder's rights.

However, in the case of a process patent there is no effective way by which a patent owner can prevent a firm from duplicating and using the protected process overseas and then selling the product of that process in the United States.

The Process Patent Amendments Act of 1988, as contained the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, closes a gap in U.S. patent law that has aided foreign firms that pirate American intellectual property at the expense of American innovators, jobs, and balance of trade.

Under current law, if the patented process is practiced within the United States without authorization of the patent holder, the patent holder has recourse against the manufacturer if the patented process is practiced outside the United States and the resulting product is imported, used or sold within the United States, the patent holder cannot obtain damages for the unauthorized use of its U.S. patent.

These amendments do not, in any way, reduce the current protection against unauthorized practice of the patented process within the United States. Rather, the amendments extend the protection, with some modifications, to unauthorized practice offshore as most other nations have done for the process patents they issue.

Specifically, if a party in the United States knew he was dealing in infringing merchandise—whether by importing, using or selling the product resulting from the patented process—he is liable for infringement from the time he acquired such knowledge until he ceases infringement unless the use is noncommercial or a retail sale and an adequate remedy is available from other parties. For example, if the party contracted for goods to be made abroad by a specific process and that process was covered by a current, valid U.S. process patent, the party is liable for infringement as a party with knowledge just as if he had practiced the process himself.

If the U.S. party did not know he was dealing in infringing goods, but owned or controlled or is owned or controlled by the person who practiced the patented process outside the United States, liability begins upon a communication from the patent holder of the type that currently suffices as notice of infringement of any kind of patent.

With regard to parties who did not practice the patented process—themselves or through corporate affiliates—or who did not know what process was in fact used, we fashioned a different, more rigorous notice standard, one that does not trigger liability, assuming infringement is ultimately proven, until the infringer has "information sufficient to persuade a reasonable person that it is likely that the product in which he is dealing was made by a patented process."

This higher notice standard was premised on the assumption that U.S. purchasers sometimes do not have the leverage to ascertain what process is used by a foreign supplier or obtain patent indemnification clauses in their contracts to insulate them from liability for infringement. Since patent infringement cases are tried in courts of equity, we expect courts will balance the notice requirements with the degree to which infringers elected not to use their leverage in ascertaining what processes were in fact used or to avail themselves of heretofore normal contractual terms what protect them against infringment liability.

We appreciate that importers, users, and sellers may acquire the information in a variety of ways about the processes used to manufacture products for them. The patent holder may provide a potential infringer with a written notification which: First, charges infringement; second, specifies the patented process alleged to have been used; third, provides the reasons for a good-faith belief that such process was used; and fourth, such information as is reasonably necessary to explain fairly the patent holder's belief, unless such information is a trade secret. Such a written communication would completely satisfy the notice requirement. Assertions to the contrary by the foreign manufacturer or supplier would not vitiate this notice.

Rather than detail the type of information that would be required to achieve notice, we preferred to statutorily express the standard—"likely"—and the objective of the information—to reasonably explain the patent holder's belief. This reflects our belief that there may be many ways a patent holder may deduce that it is likely that its patented process is being used by an unauthorized person.

Process technology is important in the biotechnology industry, the electronics industry, and the pharmaceutical industry, among others. Recent examples of infringing imports involving process technologies include fiber optics and amorphous metals. During the last Congress we received many letters of support, one from the American Flint Glass Workers Union stating that they believed inadequate process patents protection has cost their industry alone upward of 50,000 jobs.

With regard to other provisions of the process patent section one of the most important compromises was reached when the other body agreed to delete its language that would have allowed an infringer to sell products for "which the party has made a binding commitment to purchase and which has been partially or wholly manufactured before the party had notice of infringement." This language went to the heart of the process patent legislation. The whole purpose of this legislation is to preclude the importation of products that violate a U.S. process patent. The patent owner would never be certain as to what was "partially or wholly manufactured, before the party had notice of infringment." An infringer could put together "a binding commitment" with the foreign manufacture that could last for years. In a practical sense, a U.S. patent owner cannot determine whether imported and infringing goods were or were not "wholly or partially manufactured" when the commitment was made. These acts in a foreign country cannot be proved. Therefore, a court will be unable to assess damages or determine if there was actionable infringement. At best this language was mischievous and at worst it created a giant loophole.

Another significant act occurred when the other body agreed to delete from its notice provision the language "any commercially feasible process other than the patented process" was likely to have been used. We decided against setting forth examples in the statute of the types of information that would be persuasive. In particular, we dropped the other body's version's requirement that the patent holder set forth such information as is reasonably necessary to fairly explain the patent holder's belief that no commercially feasible process other than his was likely to have been used. The patent holder is not intended to have to establish a negative—that no other process could have been used on top of having to provide information that the patent holder has good faith reasons to believe that it is likely his patented process was used. Furthermore, it is not our intent to require patent holders, as a condition of enforcing their intellectual property rights, to explain to foreign and domestic competitors how to avoid infringing their patent with a list of all commercially feasible processes, patented and unpatented, known to them for producing the product. Nor, is it the intent of this legislation that a written notification provide a road map of how to defend against the allegation of infringement. Certainly, we do not believe that information be required to achieve notice that would not be required to win the infringement case.

We realized that parties may have access to many sources of information in addition to whatever written communication might originate from the patent holder. This bill is not intended to condone a practice of "putting one's head in the sand" or shutting one's eyes to suspicious business practices. Thus, the legislation requires a court to consider what other information was available to the infringer which would heighten a reasonable person's concern that he might be infringing. At such time as the totality of information available to a party is sufficient to persuade a reasonable person that infringement is likely, the court shall designate the party to have had notice.

For example, if a party is dealing with a supplier he knows to have a reputation for infringing patents, the written communication from the patent holder need not be as complete as that required under paragraph 5(B). Similarly, if the normal practice in the industry that supplies the particular type of goods is to infringe, the importer or seller may have a higher responsibility to investigate and gather his own information.

Once a person has notice that he is importing, using or selling a product that is likely to have been made by a process patented in the United States, he can either, first, stop what he is doing and avoid any possibility of liability for infringement or, second, continue to profit from his actions but do so at risk of being subsequently held liable for infringement damages if a court finds him to have infringed.

With increasing frequency, foreign firms are pirating American inventions and denying our people access to their markets. This legislation addresses this problem.

There is a provision in this legislation that I believe is one of utmost importance. This is the so-called market access provision to improve international intellectual property protection which was originally in the other body's version of the trade bill but not in our bill.

The original House version adopted on April 27, 1987 dealt with only the antipiracy provision. The other body's version dealt with both the protection of intellectual property from foreign piracy and market access to remove trade restrictions that deny entry of U.S. intellectual property into other countries. I strongly support both the market access and antipiracy provisions and am pleased to have had a part in insuring that these provisions are incorporated in this bill.

The export of U.S. films, television programs, and home video cassettes return to this country each year more than $1 billion in a surplus balance of trade. A large portion of our country's wealth comes from the creation of intellectual property which is in great demand around the world. A primary objective of the antipiracy and market access provisions of this legislation is to ensure that intellectual property can move freely in world markets and be protected in other countries against unauthorized duplication.

Piracy and market access barriers cost American intellectual property industries billions of dollars annually. Often these twin problems operate in tandem, and they are unrestrained in many nations. Moreover, when our legitimate products are kept out by trade barriers, pirates rush in to fill the void with illegitimate copies.

Current trade law must be strengthened to provide for a comprehensive attack on our most egregious intellectual property trade problems. A swift, streamlined, and fast track approach is needed to address the unique needs of the intellectual property industries. This legislation recognizes the very special nature of intellectual property, that its full commercial value is often of very short duration and can easily be stolen.

This bill addresses these problems by requiring self-initiated section 301 proceedings against offending countries that persist in maintaining market barriers.

Investigations are on a fast track—they must be concluded within 6 months, except where complex circumstances or responsiveness on the part of the offending nation, suggest a short extension.

In most cases, a Presidential determination on any action recommended by the U.S. Trade Representative must be made within 30 days of the close of the investigation with immediate implementation of any corrective measures. However, the President may have up to 4 months to render his decision in certain complex circumstances set out in the legislation. The proposal is not mandatory. The President does not have to act where he finds that to do so would not be in the national economic interest, or where the elimination of the acts, policies, or practices complained of is impossible.

This intellectual property provision is especially timely, because the Canadian Government is threatening to impose severe trade restrictions in the form of a licensing process which could reduce the American film industry's ability to market its films in Canada. Canadians urge the adoption of their trade barriers under the phrase "cultural sovereignty." What they really mean is that they should have "economic sovereignty" over the distribution of films in Canada. Moreover, the Canadians want to deal with not only films but publishing works. They propose restrictions that would have an immense adverse impact on our U.S. intellectual property industries.

For this reason, I am pleased we have been able to agree on an effective improvement in international property protection, one that is sorely needed as our intellectual property industries deal in an increasingly complex world beset by many trade problems unknown only a decade ago.

In an article in the February edition of Forbes magazine Howard Banks states:

> For going on 40 years, the U.S. has been sacrificing national economic interests to the bigger cause of keeping the Free World prosperous. Simple arithmetic says the party is over. No more "Mr. Nice Guy."

I believe Mr. Banks is right on target. However, you have to be very careful when making a comment like that in the area of international trade because someone, somewhere will quickly label you a protectionist. For that record, I am not a protectionist. I strongly support free trade, but the only country to practice free trade in the real sense of opening up their borders to anyone and everyone is the good old United States of America. The international definition of free trade is to sell as much as you can as often as you can but only in the United States. We as a country have permitted this double standard and our trading partners continue to get away with it because they know that we will not retaliate. This trade bill makes a strong statement that the time of the double standard is over and I believe our trading partners will understand it.

Our market is the biggest chip we have to play. The only reason that countries like Germany, Japan, Taiwan, South Korea, and the rest are as well off as they are is because of the access they have had over the years to our market. Is it protectionist to say, "We'll buy your shoes only if you permit us to sell personal computers in your country?" Is it protectionist to say, if you want to sell cars in this country then open your markets to American beef, American citrus fruits, and American wheat. If our trading partners want access to the best market in the world then they better be prepared to provide us equal and fair access to theirs.

These provisions in the trade bill make a number of important changes regarding intellectual and industrial property law. They are changes that are important to U.S. industry. They are changes that are important to U.S. inventors and they are changes that are important to maintaining U.S. ingenuity and creativity. These provisions of the trade bill have the strong support of the administration, and I hope this legislation can be quickly enacted into law.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, there is much of importance in this bill. I commend the gentleman from Wisconsin, BOB KASTENMEIER, and the gentleman from California, CARLOS MOORHEAD, for their guidance and leadership in developing the compromises on the intellectual and industrial property sections of the trade bill and will limit my remarks to them. The continued support and hard work of these gentlemen in the copyright and patent law area has made our job a lot easier in understanding this complicated area of the law. We are indebted to you both for your effort.

Two of the provisions of the trade bill which were drafted by the House Judiciary Committee, process patents and International Trade Commission reform are both part of the President's original competitive package. Process patents and International Trade Commission reform are also contained in bills introduced year after year by my friend and colleague from California [Mr. MOORHEAD]. I am pleased that we were able to compromise and retain both provisions in the trade bill.

The importance of the use of the International Trade Commission and the use of process patent protection to our national economy, especially in such vital new technical fields as industrial chemicals and pharmaceutical manufacturing, biotechnology and microbiology, cannot be overstated. Americans have the ingenuity and creativity to compete in this new environment. However, what they create must not be stolen. These provisions in the trade bill will go a long way toward curbing piracy, creating jobs, and improving our balance of trade.

Process patents are particularly important to the biotechnology industry. Biotechnology is not a product you can patent, but rather it's a group of processes that have in common the use of genetically altered living organisms to produce new medical, agricultural, chemical, energy, and waste cleanup products that will enhance our future. Biotechnology was invented in America. The U.S. industry's 1986 revenues exceeded $600 million. Their 1988 revenues are projected to be at least double the 1986 figure. Thousands of new, high-paying jobs are being produced as a result.

Because so many of the biotech inventions are protected by process patents, the future of that industry depends greatly on what Congress does to protect U.S. process patents from unfair foreign competition. America's foreign competitors, most of whom have invested comparatively little in biotechnology research, have targeted the biotech industry for major and concerted action. According to the biotechnology association, in Japan the Ministry of International Trade and Industry [MITI] and the Japanese biotechnology industry have joined forces and established a central plan to turn Japanese biotechnology into a 127 billion yen per year industry by the year 2000. The process patents provisions contained in the trade bill will go a long way in helping our industry maintain its innovative edge.

One of the provisions which we differed with the other body on dealt with whether a patent owner should be required to disclose patent information to a competitor who might also be a potential infringer.

The Senate bill created a scheme where patent owners must "* * * identify all process patents owned * * * or licensed * * * that * * * could be asserted to be infringed." The House bill contained no such provision. We were able to substantially soften this provision.

The launching of a new business or a new product imposes certain obligations, responsibilities and liabilities on the entrepreneur. Among the liabilities is infringement of another person's patents or trademarks. To ensure against economic loss due to patent infringement, a reasonable business practice is to do a patent search in the Patent and Trademark Office and to routinely include indemnity clauses in contracts.

U.S. manufacturers who plan to export their products investigate the status of foreign patents to avoid infringement. Foreign manufacturers should be required to do at least as much to protect U.S. patents as our manufacturers do to avoid infringing foreign patents.

The "request for disclosure" provision contained in the Senate bill, in the opinion of the House turns conventional business practice on its head. The Senate bill created a situation where a competitor gets from the patent owner a list of patents that could be infringed if used by the competitor. Such a scheme protects infringers, imposes burdensome requirements on patent owners, and created a situation that is totally contrary to conventional business practice. There is no precedent in Federal law requiring a private business to disclose commercial information to competitors or suffer a penalty.

The Senate version would have required in addition to the disclosure of patents owned by a plaintiff, the disclosure of license arrangements between patent holders and their licensees. This particular part of the disclosure requirement in the Senate bill would impose a difficult administrative burden on the patent owner. The requirement failed to recognize that, while the disclosure of process patents represents the release of information already within the public domain, the disclosure of license arrangements does not. Such arrangements are a product of private contractual agreement between the parties, and the very existence of a contractual relationship between patent holders and their licensees constitutes sensitive business information. Therefore, this provision was dropped. In its place we agreed in the event of a request for disclosure that is made to a person with a patent license, exclusive or nonexclusive, the recipient of such a request has the choice of either a direct response or passing the request for disclosure on to the licensor. It is very important to note that we agreed that no information obtained in the course of a request for disclosure may be used in subsequent litigation involving the same parties. My concern was that this disclosure mechanism not be used for discovery in, for example, an antitrust suit or any other litigation involving issues not related to patent law.

Another patent provision contained in the original Senate trade bill which I wish we were able to retain but we were not and that dealt with the patent misuse doctrine. Patent misuse is a common law doctrine that has its roots in the equitable doctrine of unclean hands. Section 271 of title 35, United States Code provides that certain narrowly described activities of a patent owner shall not be considered patent misuse. A number of Senators, and a number of House Members including myself, strongly supported patent misuse reform. Although we were unable to retain the patent misuse provision we were able to obtain a commitment from the House subcommittee chairman to hold a public hearing on the issue and begin the separate processing of a patent misuse reform bill. These hearings have been held and I hope we can move this legislation forward. Congress needs to give further attention to proposals for eliminating or modifying the patent misuse doctrine. Arbitrary rules that discourage licensing practices which do not violate the antitrust laws should be eliminated. Technology licensing can help promote competition and early introduction of innovations into the marketplace.

Another provision of the original trade bill which we were able to retain and which will be very helpful to the patent community is reform of the International Trade Commission [ITC]. Presently, patent infringement cases before the ITC must prove injury to a domestic industry. This bill would eliminate the injury requirement.

Making it easier to file complaints before the ITC is a significant change especially when you consider that almost 90 percent of all cases brought before the ITC involve patent infringement.

The main difference concerned transferring authority which now reside in the President to the U.S. Trade Representative. This change in existing law was found in the House version and similar restrictions run through the entire House bill. This is one of the provisions that the President strongly objected to and such a provision is not contained in this bill.

The importance of effective patent law in protecting the investments of U.S. industry in research and development cannot be overemphasized. I believe we have to do something as a nation to put our trading partners on notice that if they want to continue to reap the benefits of our markets they are going to have to open their markets. As a country we can no longer put the rest of the world's economic well being ahead of our own and this trade bill puts our trading partners on notice that we mean business when it comes to fair and open trade.

In addition, I was also a party to the agreement on the Exon-Florio amendment and I want to comment on a critical aspect of that agreement. That is, the definition of the term "national security." Under the agreement, for the President to initiate an investigation of a merger, acquisition, or takeover by a foreigner, he must find that the action could threaten our national security.

Mr. Chairman, for most of this Nation's history the ability to assure our national security was based on our abundant natural resources and the determination and talent of our people. That ability has eroded steadily in this century as our dependence on foreign raw materials and products have grown. Many of us remember the herculean effort in the dark hours of World War II to create a synthetic substitute for quinine, the antimalaria drug which was denied us when the Japanese conquered Southeast Asia.

Today, in maintaining our national security, we must contend not only with our reliance on foreign sources for raw materials and, increasingly, for manufactured goods, we also need to assure our capacity to develop and produce the cutting edge high technologies which are at the core of our industrial, economic, and military strength.

In our view, the scope of national security is not limited to those industries which develop and produce tanks, rifles, and fighter bombers. It includes the ability to provide a broad range of human services, materials, products, and technological innovation. Of special concern are key domestic high technology industries of strategic importance that play a crucial role in the current and future protection of the national security and our national interests.

U.S. military and national security increasingly rests on a group of technology-intensive industries whose highly skilled employees produce the sophisticated machines, materials, chemicals, and services that are essential to fighting a modern war and to sustaining an advanced industrial economy. These industry segments include, but are not limited to technology, telecommunications, semiconductors, robotics, computers, biotechnology, pharmaceuticals, strategic metals, and advanced materials. The importance of these industries to our national security is evidenced by the significant amounts of defense related products and services they provide to the Government.

These industries are extremely diverse, but they share a number of common features. They are technology intensive and technology driven. They develop innovative products and technology at the forefront of industrial efficiency that are needed to assure that this Nation is secure. A much higher than average proportion of their total investments are made in research and development. Technology itself is one of their leading assets, and is uniquely subject to erosion whether through acquisition or piracy of intellectual property, loss of skilled personnel, or simply a failure to maintain the high level of R&D spending needed to sustain technological competitiveness. They are the base for the additional technologies needed to protect the national security in the future.

In that future, the margin of superiority may be a laser antitank weapon or a breakthrough in biotechnology that strengthens the human immune system against biological warfare. For the next century, it is our research and development infrastructure which will be our most important national security resource, just as the timber to build our naval fleet and the iron ore to cast our cannon were in the last century. The Exon-Florio amendment, as agreed to in the orginal trade bill conference, clearly gives the President the authority he needs to act to protect our high-technology industries should they be threatened.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], the chairman of the subcommittee which developed these important rules on international property rights.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, today the House has before it a truly historic piece of legislation, the Omnibus Trade Reform Act of 1988. This bill is the culmination of more than 3 years of work, addressing a fundamental governmental concern. My participation in producing this bill derives chiefly from my role as the chairman of the subcommittee with responsibility for intellectual property legislation—patents, copyright, trademarks, and semiconductor mask works—in developing a comprehensive structure for confronting the relationship between trade and piracy of products protected by U.S. intellectual property law.

This bill contains four major initiatives relating to enhanced intellectual property protection. First, the bill seeks to attack piracy of products made in violation of U.S. process patents. This change in our law will dramatically improve the ability of our technology dependent industries—such as biotechnology and electronics—to fairly compete.

Second, the legislation significantly improves the rights of all intellectual property owners by making it easier to obtain relief against imported goods that have been made in violation of U.S. intellectual property laws. This provision eliminates the need to establish injury from the required elements of proof in a proceeding before the International Trade Commission.

Third, the bill directs greater governmental resources to the investigation of unfair practices when those acts detrimentally affect an industry whose product is protected by a U.S. intellectual property right. The availability of trade sanctions against other nations whose laws or business practices unfairly deal with U.S. products is an important element in the arsenal of weapons needed to protect U.S. products and jobs.

Fourth, the legislation grants the executive branch negotiating authority for the new round of trade talks under the auspices of the GATT [General Agreement on Tariff and Trade]. This round of talks is directed at reducing unfair trade practices in agriculture, expanding the coverage of GATT to include services and investments, and—most notably—enhanced protection for intellectual property. The legislation recognizes the need for international, multilateral discussions and standards in the area of intellectual property protection. I have been heartened by the progress made in this area thus far.

The basic thrust of the trade bill is to fashion a structure that enables fair trade to occur. I am convinced that the provisions aimed at enhancing the protection of intellectual property are not discriminatory or unfair to our trading partners. They are a rational response to a changing and growing international marketplace.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I come from an area of the United States which has been tremendously impacted adversely by the unfair nature of our international trading partners. Although I would have liked to have seen more stringent provisions included in this measure, I do commend the chairmen and the committees responsible. They have made a major step forward in addressing and securing for us a trade policy that will last for the rest of this century, we hope.

Mr. Chairman, I also join the gentleman from Arkansas with my concern over the allowance of a special provision that will allow grain alcohol or wine alcohol coming in through the Caribbean Basin Initiative into the United States. I think it will adversely impact our grain industry as well as our alcohol industry which is using the United States or American grain producing ethanol.

I say that I regrettably must join in the motion to recommit with instructions. I hope that it will not delay the passage of this very vital legislation.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to our distinguished colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I think the chairman of the committee has done an incredible job on this bill. If it becomes law, he will have overhauled both the tax and the trade codes in just 3 years. The subcommittee chairman and its ranking member, all members, worked hard, and conference work was at times very complex and, indeed, very difficult.

A heroic effort has been made to improve this bill, and the bill is improved but not enough. This bill is born out of desperation and what appeared to be $200 billion trade deficits as far as the eye could see. Even through it is not clear sailing, the trade deficit storm is beginning to break. The dollar's drop is helping our exports. The administration now says that they want this baby but they do not really love it, they look at it like the priest at the Irish funeral who could think only of one good thing to say about the deceased, that he was better than his brother, but just being better than his brother is not always something to be proud of.

In trying to stop a future trade bill disaster, the administration has swallowed a lot of retaliation, especially retaliation against farmers.

Everybody seems to think that the Gephardt section 301 tiger has been caged. My good friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Pease] writes cheerfully about its replacement: "Super 301 would move toward a wholesale approach to trade policy by requiring the U.S. Government to self-initiate simultaneously a series of cases against countries." Does this sound like the Super 301 tiger has been declawed? Who are those countries my good friend so gleefully wishes to paw? They are the ones who buy all of our farm products.

Does anybody doubt that when we announce the 10, 15, or 20 new trade barriers required under section 301 that those farm exports will not suffer?

The gentleman from Ohio also says Super 301 under this bill: "represents a watershed change; if enacted, it would be by far the toughest, most aggressive mandate against unfair trade ever."

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that Messrs. Smoot and Hawley would enjoy passing this honor on to us. If it is trade fights the sponsors want, we have had plenty. We just finished a beef and citrus conflict with Japan and a semiconductor shootout and an EC enlargement flareup, and the great pasta war and the Canadian corn collision. Apparently, that is not enough action for those Super 301 hawks. They want more battles, and they want them to hatch simultaneously.

Can our fragile farm markets survive a Super 301 nuclear attack?

Note that Super 301 actions can only be waived, and I quote, "under extraordinary circumstances" where the adverse impact of retaliation is, and I quote again, "substantially out of proportion" to the benefits of the actions. In other words, the attitude here is if it is only going to cost us a few million bushels of corn or wheat, who the heck cares?

This Member cares, and this administration ought to care, and if it does not, then it is one issue where George Bush ought to differ with the administration.

Super 301 is not the only problem with this bill. The bill strings a new bureaucratic protectionist fiddle and invites only special interests to play it.

Steel, automobiles, rust buckets in the Northeast of our country, and we all know what the real problem is: it is the Federal deficit. Mr. Gephardt, a member of the committee, said in committee in the original markup when asked what the real problem was with this trade imbalance, and he said that 80 percent of the problem is right in America, made in America by the inability of the Congress to manage its fiscal house, and that only 20 percent of the problem may be caused by cheating, dumping, illegal subsidies or what we call unfair competition.

This bill creates a brandnew extensive entitlement program with little regard for future costs, and it forgives foreign debt.

Let us vote this bill down.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Dorgan].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for my friend from Nebraska. We work on many issues together, but I must confess I have a disagreement with him on this issue.

Let me see if I might give the Members a different perspective from the Farm Belt. It is true that our farm producers need to find foreign markets for much of what they produce, but it is also true that those producers are not selling nearly as much as they should be able to sell in many of the big markets around the world because they meet barriers and resistance. They ought to expect more from America's major trading partners than they now get in terms of market access.

The fact is we have had a trade policy that has been adrift, rudderless, for years, and we are choking on the red ink of trade deficits. It is about time somebody did something about it.

This legislation is an attempt to establish a trade policy in this country that will be good for America, and for the farmers in America. This is not an attempt to restrict markets. This is not an attempt to establish any kind of protectionism. This is an attempt to force open foreign markets. Nothing is more important to our family farmers in America than to have open markets across the world in which they can sell their agricultural products.

We have an honest disagreement about what this bill represents. In my judgment it does not represent new barriers. In my judgment it represents new opportunities all around this world. Only if we have the nerve and the will to tell other countries in the world who trade with us that we are going to insist that they treat us just as generously as we have treated them; will they begin to act to open their markets.

The U.S. Trade Representative has put out a blue book that is 300 pages long. I held it up on the floor here some while ago. It is a book that establishes in writing the barriers and unfair practices that our trading partners put up in the way of our producers trying to compete in their countries, 300 pages of unfair practices and barriers that our producers meet when they try and compete overseas.

We ought not take that. We ought not accept that. We ought to put pressure on our allies to stop it.

How do we put that pressure on our allies? We pass this kind of a trade bill that says we expect of you what we have given you. We expect open markets from you because that is what we have offered to your producers, and we expect nothing less than that.

H.R. 4848 is a good bill. I do not like the ethanol provisions in it, and I intend to address that later. But generally speaking, I applaud the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Gibbons], for his leadership on the Subcommittee on Trade and I applaud the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rostenkowski], chairman of the full committee and the work that has been done in Congress generally to try and take a trade policy that has been adrift and establish some direction to it. This bill establishes a direction that is positive, that says we want to expand market opportunities all around the world, and we want to lead in trade policy to do that.

That is what this bill does. I come from farm territory, a rural State, and I say to my colleagues that this bill is good for our producers, this bill makes sense for our producers. This bill represents new opportunities for our producers.

It is time that this country had a trade policy that works, and I am convinced that this is a trade bill that will work. I applaud the work of the committee.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. Richardson].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. First of all, he is to be commended, along with the miniority and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rostenkowski], for persistence, determination and fine legislation and a major effort to overhaul our trade laws.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4848, the omnibus trade bill for 1988.

We need legislation and programs which open foreign markets and enhance U.S. exports. To grow out of its net debtor position, the United States will have to erase current deficits and produce a trade surplus.

This bill includes a number of positive programs to encourage such a reversal.

First, it improves our import relief policies to remedy injury to U.S. industries. It provides authority and negotiating objectives for new multilateral trade negotiations to strengthen GATT.

Second, the bill proposes to facilitate the growth of U.S. exports by expanding U.S. export promotion activities and providing greater opportunities for small businesses to export their products.

Most importantly, Mr. Chairman, this bill enhances U.S. ability to compete in the world market.

First, this bill upgrades education and training programs to increase the productivity of U.S. workers.

Second, it also contains one of my provisions which ensures that any new educational programs created under the omnibus trade bill will be sensitive to the needs of minority and disadvantaged students.

This bill is a sincere effort by the Congress to address legitimate concerns. If the President cares about the future of American industry, he will sign this bill into law.

CHANGES IN TRADE LAWS

UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES

The bill takes a number of steps to strengthen laws that protect against unfair foreign trade practices, and to press the administration to take effective action against such practices.

First, the bill requires the President to retaliate against violations of trade agreements and other "unjustifiable" trade practices, and permits the President to waive this mandatory retaliation only under specified circumstances.

Second, the measure requires the administration to identify unfair trade practices and countries as priorities for action, to initiate unfair trade practice investigations for these priority situations, and to seek agreements for elimination of the practices over a 3-year period.

Third, the measure expands the definition of unfair trade practices to include export targeting—defined as concerted government plans to increase the export competitiveness of certain industries—denial of worker rights, and foreign cartels. The administration would be authorized, but not required, to retaliate against such practices.

Finally, the bill transfers from the President to the U.S. Trade Representative [USTR] the authority to decide whether a foreign practice is unfair under U.S. law, and to determine and implement remedial action against such unfair practices. The change is intended to enhance USTR's position as the lead trade agency and to make it less likely that trade retaliation would be waived because of foreign policy, defense, or other considerations.

IMPORT RELIEF AND OTHER TRADE LAW CHANGES

The bill requires all firms that receive temporary import relief from rising imports to prove not only economic injury from such imports but also that trade relief would help the firm adjust and become more competitive. It also expands the range of options the President can employ in granting trade relief, such as adjustment measures and international negotiations.

The measure also provides special authority to USTR to negotiate the opening of foreign telecommunications markets. Finally, the agreement provides the administration with the authority to conduct both multilateral and bilateral negotiations until 1991, with possible 2-year extensions.

WORKER RETRAINING PROGRAMS

The bill strengthens and expands the Trade Adjustment Assistance [TAA] Program and increases its emphasis on training. The bill makes training an entitlement; any worker who meets specified criteria would be entitled to payment of training program costs. Total TAA program costs are capped at $80 million.

In addition, the measure expands the TAA Program to oil and gas workers and to all secondary workers—those employed in providing goods and services to the industries directly affected by imports. Secondary workers, however, would only become eligible if an import fee is put in place to provide financing.

The bill authorizes $980 million a year for the next 2 years for a new Worker Readjustment Program, to provide comprehensive assistance to dislocated workers—workers who have lost their jobs to plant shutdowns or layoffs. The program would be run principally at the State level, with States receiving 80 percent of the funds.

SANCTIONS AGAINST TOSHIBA AND KONGSBERG

The bill imposes sanctions against subsidiaries of Toshiba Corporation of Japan and Kongsberg Vaapenfabrikk of Norway for selling to the Soviets technology which will enable them to produce quiet submarines. The noise of Soviet subs has been a major advantage to the United States in keeping track of their whereabouts. The agreement bars the subsidiaries from selling goods to the U.S. Government or commercially in the United States for 3 years, and also bars the parent corporations from selling to the U.S. Government for the same period. The prohibitions could be waived for essential defense-related goods and for commercial spare parts and components that U.S. industries cannot acquire elsewhere.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCE AND THIRD WORLD DEBT

The bill requires the Treasury Department to enter into discussions with other countries on establishing a special debt management facility to serve as an intermediary between private banks and indebted Third World governments. The bill specifies that such discussions would not be required if the Treasury Department determines, within 6 months, that discussions would carry a material risk of reducing the value of the debt, disrupting debt service, or causing defaults. However, a second determination would be required after 1 year.

The bill prohibits foreign-owned securities firms from serving as primary dealers in U.S. Government securities, unless the firm's home country grants comparable access to U.S. companies.

EXPORT EXPANSION

The bill contains numerous provisions to promote U.S. exports and increase U.S. competitiveness. It revises various export control laws to ease national security restrictions on goods sold to U.S. allies. In addition, it authorizes a Competitiveness Policy Council to make recommendations on enhancing U.S. competitiveness.

AGRICULTURE

The bill provides a 2-year extension for the Export Enhancement Program, which uses surplus commodities to lower U.S. agricultural export prices, and increases the overall value of commodities used in the program to $2.5 billion. It doubles the authorization of the Targeted Export Assistance Program to $215 million, and increases the authorization for the Foreign Agricultural Service by $20 million. If significant progress has not been made by 1990 in the new agricultural talks under GATT, the bill requires the Agriculture Department to implement a marketing loan program for wheat, feed grains, and soybeans—unless it would harm the negotiations.

The measure repeals the windfall profit tax on oil imposed in 1980 after the decontrol of oil prices. It contains a new "Buy American" provision prohibiting Federal purchases of goods and services produced in foreign nations whose governments discriminate in the award of contracts against U.S. firms and products.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS].

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, trade reform has been an issue of significant importance to me since I was elected to Congress in 1980. For several years, I have worked with my colleagues in hopes of creating trade policy that would address the inequities that exist in our current trade laws and bring relief to American industry and American workers. I became actively involved in creating trade legislation when a Corning Glass Works plant located in my district eventually closed because it became a victim of unfair foreign competition. In this instance, antidumping statutes were not enforced properly by the previous administration and, as a result, 400 Hoosiers employed by the Bluffton, IN, plant were left without jobs.

It is my belief that the omnibus trade bill we are considering today will prevent similar incidents from occurring in the future. In my judgment, this measure will have a positive impact on Indiana and the rest of our Nation. The legislation will allow the U.S. agricultural export programs to compete with foreign markets in supplying exports to Third World countries. It also addresses the problem of illegal subsidies and the dumping of foreign products on American markets and it allocates additional power to the U.S. Trade Representative.

In the last 3 years, Indiana has been ranked as 1 of the top 10 States in producing agricultural exports. Products in high demand by other countries include some of Indiana's main crops—wheat, corn, and soybean products. Nationally, 1 out of every 4 acres farmed in the United States is exported to other countries, and the percentage of acres farmed for export in Indiana is considerably higher. These exports are on the rise and have been a positive contribution in balancing our Nation's trade deficit, as well as providing substantial income for citizens of my State. During this period of low yields and high prices caused by the drought, the Export Enhancement Program is even more crucial to American farmers. The export enhancement provision of the trade bill will allow the United States to compete in a more aggressive fashion with unfair foreign competition. This is a positive step in pushing international trade to free market competition. It also gives the U.S. Agriculture Secretary the discretion to continue export enhancement programs through 1990 if deemed necessary.

The legislation also provides for improved enforcement of current antidumping laws. The bill accomplishes this objective by directing the International Trade Commission to conduct a series of reports which will identify countries which engage in unfair trade practices against the United States. These reports will be reviewed by congressional committees and the U.S. Trade Representative. The bill also requires the Commerce Department to conduct expedited antidumping investigations on multiple offenders. In light of what occurred in Bluffton, IN, in the early 1980's, I strongly advocate this provision of the trade bill.

Another positive component of the trade bill grants additional authority to the U.S. Trade Representative. Through this legislation, the U.S. Trade Representative is given authority to order retaliation against countries that have maintained unfair trade practices with the United States. To those that say this gives too much authority to the Trade Representative, the bill provides that the Trade Representative is to serve at the discretion of the President. This aspect of the trade legislation will provide additional administrative oversight of our trade policies and will give a strong signal to other countries that the United States will no longer tolerate discriminatory trade practices against American products.

Because these elements of this final version of the trade bill are so beneficial to Indiana business and to our national economy, I intend to vote for the legislation even though I continue to have very serious reservations about its provisions regarding the Toshiba Corp. These reservations have been the primary reason why I have been opposed to earlier versions of the trade bill. I, along with others, have made repeated attempts to impose tough sanctions on the Toshiba Corp., for their grievous violations of our national security. I think that by now my colleagues are well aware of the impact which this corporation's deliberate sale for profit of our defense technology has had on our national security. While I am gratified that this legislation recognizes that such betrayals of our trust should not be tolerated, I remain fully convinced that the provisions it contains are inadequate to provide any meaningful punishment to Toshiba for its actions.

It is unfortunate that the House has not had an opportunity to vote directly on this issue. The sanctions which are included in this bill came to us through the conference on its first version. Unfortunately, this conference significantly watered down the sanctions passed by the Senate as a result of a campaign by Toshiba's $3 million army of lobbyists, which succeeded in almost entirely limiting punishment to the small subsidiary which made the actual sale. I am concerned about the message we are sending as an institution by providing such limited sanctions, because I believe we are telling corporations who may contemplate such sales in the future that Congress will not take meaningful action to punish them.

To address these issues, I went before the Rules Committee in an effort to offer two amendments which I believe would have significantly strengthened the deficiencies in this bill. These amendments would have brought the trade bill sanctions back into line with legislation I introduced last year on this subject and the original Senate sanctions. While I support moving this legislation in a timely fashion, I believed that we must clearly express our views on the participation of parent corporations in illegal technology diversions.

First, I believe that the entire Toshiba Corp., should have been included in all sanctions contained in the trade bill. Placing restrictions on Government contracting alone is a mere slap on the wrist. From classified briefings, it has become readily apparent that within the last 7 years Toshiba Corp., and other Japanese firms have been heavily involved in illegally enhancing the microelectronic capability of Warsaw Pact nations. Toshiba is not the innocent bystander which it claims to be, and the sale of milling machinery was not an isolated incident.

I hope that the small sanctions which are included in this bill at least set the legal precedent that parent corporations can be held responsible for the actions of their subsidiaries. I am concerned with mandatory exclusions contained in this package which would force the President to exempt any corporation from future sanctions that did not itself knowingly violate international export controls. Mr. Chairman, that section of the bill is bad law and a bad precedent, because it encourages dishonest companies to set up dummy subsidiaries and compartmentalize illegal sales to escape punishment. I believe our actions against Toshiba, while grossly insufficient, at the minimum show congressional intent that such exclusions must be extraordinary and that parent corporations can be held liable.

Again, while I am not satisfied with the form of the Toshiba sanctions contained in this legislation, I am nonetheless appreciative that it recognizes the importance of this issue, and takes steps to address our policy on exports of sensitive technology. Despite my disappointment in not being allowed by the Rules Committee to seek to incorporate stricter santions against Toshiba, my deep personal concern on this single issue must temporarily stand aside in favor of the multitude of very real benefits which this bill contains for the farmers, workers, and businessmen who are my constituents.

I also had reservations about enacting omnibus trade legislation because I was extremely concerned that such a bill might become a vehicle for protectionist trade measures which would hurt our industry far more than it would help. I was pleased, however, that a House amendment was removed which would have placed high tariffs and quotas against countries with high trade surpluses with the United States without regard to which products were treated fairly or unfairly. The only real effect of this amendment would have been to force Government to meddle in a free market where it clearly does not belong. The probable effect would have been to reduce opportunities for American business and labor rather than enhancing them.

Exports are a vital part of our national economy, and to undercut our ability to compete in foreign markets through protectionism would be a serious mistake. American industries are not asking for unfair advantages, just an opportunity to compete fairly. I believe that this revised bill now before us provides many tools to American business to do that, and remedies a number of impediments contained in existing law.

Through this bill, we now have an opporunity to improve trade reform policy. This legislation we are considering today provides broader relief to industries threatened by unfair trade practices, including foreign industrial targeting. It cracks down on dumping and subsidized imports and most importantly, it provides for expanded agricultural exports. It opens doors to America's products which means more American jobs.

I will support this package because it responds to our country's serious trade problems with fair and strong legislation. The intention of this bill is a good one; it will ensure a better trading system now and in the future to protect U.S. jobs and to open markets for U.S. producers. I hope this House will adopt this trade package. It is a good bill and its adoption will allow our country to have a real trade reform law.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE], my distinguished colleague on the Trade Subcommittee.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. I would like to take a few seconds to congratulate all involved in this process, the Members of the majority, the minority, and the staff. It has been sort of a long process, but I think that we are close to the culmination of that work.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4848.

Mr. Chairman, I have in the past stood before this body to voice my disappointment over the fact that it took a $170 billion trade deficit to finally remove our rose-tinted glasses. Previously, we had rigidly and imprudently adhered to a trade policy so idealistic in nature, that it failed to recognize that our trading partners were using it to gain unlimited access to our markets while denying us equal access to theirs. Not only did it ignore the unfair practices of those partners, it left us without recourse for addressing these inequities.

H.R. 4848 provides us with just that recourse. As you know, this legislation is H.R. 3 minus two provisions. However, it still contains the crowning achievements of its predecessor.

One area in which significant progress was made is on the issue of advice from the private sector. The bill expands the Private Sector Advisory Committee functions to include providing information and advice on development and implementation of overall U.S. trade policy and priorities, as well as on negotiation issues.

This is a considerable achievement in that sometimes those who formulate our Nation's trade policy tend to lose sight of the far-reaching effects of this policy on the private sector. This tells our private sector that its opinion does matter, that the U.S. Government will pay heed to its views, and that it can and will make a difference in the creation of any new trade initiatives in these United States.

Another of H.R. 4848's successes comes in the transfer of authority from the President to the U.S. trade representative in certain section 201 and 301 cases. Many of us have fought long and hard to bring this about because we recognized the confusion which exists within the administration when it comes to reaching a unified position on these types of cases. This discord adds nothing positive to the formulation of U.S. trade policy and, in fact, serves only to benefit our trading partners and at our expense.

Some of our major trading partners, recognizing the internal strife generated by developing a trade agenda in the United States, have actually taken advantage of this lack of unity by playing off our Cabinet level officials against one another.

The signal which we transmit to the rest of the world by retaining the transfer of authority provision is more than a merely symbolic gesture. Indeed, it is a message of true substance that says this to the rest of the world: "When it comes to stomping on the United States in international trade relations, the party is over. From this point on, we are embarking on a long but very steady march toward a more streamlined Government trade establishment and, therefore, a unified voice on trade policy."

And let us not forget the GATT, and the giant step taken by H.R. 4848 in terms of more clearly defining the negotiating objectives which must be achieved in the Uruguay round of the GATT. Included in these objectives are coverage for trade in services and investment, effective dispute settlement procedures, and protection of intellectual property rights.

I would say the resulting message is loud and clear—we want a GATT which is comprehensive, works, promotes fair trade in all sectors, and serves to every country's benefit. This trade legislation tells the GATT that it's high time to get off the dime, and once again become a truly effective and looked up to entity in the world trading arena.

Strengthened antidumping and countervailing duty laws, a more viable section 406 to deal with market disruption caused by imports from Communist countries, and enhanced protection abroad for U.S. intellectual property rights, simply solidify the reasoning behind enacting this historic legislation during the 100th Congress.

For those of us who have been laboring to earn the opportunity to pass a trade bill devoted entirely to trade, now is our chance to vote "yes" on just such a piece of legislation. I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 4848 and help get this great Nation back on track to a rational and coherent trade policy which can guide us into the 21st century.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE].

Mr. Chairman, let me say I know of no member of our committee or in this Congress who works more conscientiously and harder and more successfully than does the gentleman from Ohio, and it is a pleasure to yield to him.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Chairman, let me say I appreciate the generous remarks of my chairman.

Mr. Chairman, the trade bill that we passed last year was an excellent bill. It was still an excellent bill this spring when we passed the conference report. It is still a good bill today, and deserves our overwhelming support.

I think we learned a lot earlier today from what was said by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] who is, if anyone is in this House, a zealous guardian of free trade. The gentleman from Minnesota cited some important pluses in this legislation: Giving the President negotiating authority to expand world trade, not to contract it; giving approval for a new standardized system for customs evaluations.

The gentleman from Minnesota also mentioned some minor quibbles that he had with the bill, one of which he said was that under section 301 this bill adds three new causes of action against which our trading partners might retaliate or react. Of course, it goes without saying that in the existing law there are also three existing causes of action. They have been on the statute books for a number of years. They have not caused us any trouble. There is no reason to expect that the three new ones in this bill will either.

The gentleman from Minnesota mentioned in the end that provisions of this bill might create some minor trade altercations. That is a big change from the rhetoric of a year ago when opponents were talking about our trade legislation setting off a trade war. Nobody is talking about it setting off a trade war anymore.

Finally, on balance, the gentleman from Minnesota said that he thinks this bill ought to be passed. I agree. His evaluation reflects, Mr. Chairman, what I found in Geneva just 4 weeks ago when I was there to consult with a variety of people associated with GATT. The sense that I got from the GATT folks in Geneva was that our trading partners across the world have now had a chance to examine and study carefully the bill that we have put together.

They have had a chance to look at the fine print. And as a result, they are not unduly upset by this legislation. I think they would agree with the gentleman from Minnesota that on balance we are better off passing this legislation, getting it on the statute books and moving on to the important work of getting ourselves more competitive so that we can once again reassert our position as the leader in international trade.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] to commence what I believe to be on this side the debate on the Michel motion to recommit.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] is going to raise some concerns about the ethanol provisions in this bill. I share those concerns. Frankly, we should have had a debate on CBI to determine what kind of action by this Congress promotes and stimulates jobs in the Caribbean.

This legislation offers some opportunities for certain interests to move European wine alcohol or Brazilian ethanol through the Caribbean and up some drying towers and then into this country duty free. This is unfair competition.

I want CBI to work. I have seen the inactive cane fields in Haiti. Unemployment is rampant in countries like Haiti. I would like to see ethanol plants there. I do not fear that competition. I would like to see the opportunity for full-fermentation ethanol plants to operate in that region of the world because I think that would give those citizens down there some employment opportunities. But what we are doing in this bill is just wrong. I share the concerns that are going to be expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] on that issue.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes and 40 seconds to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP].

Mr. KEMP. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me and for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in very strong opposition to the so-called trade bill. I want to say to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle as well as on both sides of this issue that in speaking against the bill I do not challenge the motives of these men and women who really believe that this type of trade legislation is needed to make America more competitive, to create more jobs, and to reduce egregious trade violations.

I acknowledge that there are trade barriers to U.S. products and I acknowledge that things need to be done to reduce barriers to trade around the world.

Having said that, however, this trade bill is flawed. In listening to the debate on the floor, I am reminded of the Spanish philosopher Gaspar de Ortega y Gasset who said, "We don't know what is happening to us." And that is precisely what is happening to us.

Some of the comments that have been made on the floor in the House today are devoid, it seems to me, of understanding what is at the root of the American economic recovery and what is happening in the world.

I thought you would be interested in a July 1 column by Karen Elliott House of the Wall Street Journal who said, when Ronald Reagan came back from the Soviet Union: To the extent that the Soviets are acknowledging the failure of socialism, it is their reaction to the fact that Western-style, free-market economies are working again.

At the very time the Soviet Union is acknowledging that Government interventionist policies have failed, that socialism is moribund, that communism cannot be restructured because it is fundamentally, flawed, and that the great success of free-market economies are succeeding, those in the West who should know better are losing confidence in the very ideas of freedom that have led to the strong recovery without inflation that has generated over 16 million new jobs in the last 7 years.

I recently picked up Paul Erdman's new book, "How to Prepare Yourself for the Crash of 1989." Of course, he is the author of the book, "How to Prepare Yourself for the Crash of 1984," 1985, and 1986. But he is convinced that we are going downhill.

In addition, one of Wall Street's leading authors is Ravi Batra who has authored a best-selling book entitled "The Great Depression of 1990."

Then, of course, we have Paul Kennedy's new book, "The Rise and Fall of Great Powers." And he is not writing just about 16th century Spain or 19th century Pax Britannica; he is writing about 20th century United States. He concludes we are in decline as a great power.

And Senator PROXMIRE the other day says he hopes the Democratic Party loses because he thinks the next President is going to have to deal with a recession and he does not want the Democratic Party to have to deal with it.

All of these doomsayers are wrong and their predictions are nonsense—unless we start doing stupid things like raising taxes and tariffs. How is it possible for intelligent men and women, in light of this economy and our recovery, and looking at the free trade agreements that we made with Canada and with Israel, to want to pass legislation like plant closing and trade restrictions which totally involves the Government in the decisions of entrepreneurs and trade that will harm the economy and cost us jobs? They want to pass this trade bill, with all due respect to my very good friend from Florida who is a champion of anti-Smoot-Hawley thinking on the floor of this Congress, that takes authority from the hands of President Bush or President Dukakis, whomever he will be in 1989. Our next President is going to have to face the fact that under this legislation the U.S. Trade Representative is going to be more powerful than the President when it comes to trade.

The super 301 provision literally takes authority away from President Bush or President Dukakis—it is not Reagan who is going to have to deal with this legislation, it is the next President.

It takes authority in very delicate trade negotiations with the rest of the world out of the hands of the President who is responsible not only for the good of the international trading system, but also for the public good. And it puts it in the hands of a czar, an unelected bureaucrat. It is going to turn the USTR into a funnel for problems that will exist in every single business or industry in the United States, whether it is due to trade violations or not.

Frankly, ladies and gentlemen, I fear that this bill is as close to the worst piece of legislation that I have seen in the 18 years I have been in Congress. I am not challenging the motives of anybody, but I happen to think it is historically flawed; it is the wrong legislation at the wrong time. We should be opening markets abroad, not closing markets here.

I want to specifically point to the recent article in Forbes magazine on the D-RAM crisis. We have caused a crisis in D-RAM's, dynamic random access memory units, or semiconductor chips.

The computer companies in the United States are withholding their next generation of personal computers because they cannot get this chip.

The cost of chips has risen dramatically—but that desire to punish Japan or Asia for sending chips into the United States did not hurt Japan. It hurt the United States. It hurt the computer industry, our school children who should learn computer skills, and our small businesses and farms that need computer systems to function efficiently competitively. I think it is a mistake to pass this trade legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to quote George Gilder, one of my heroes on this subject who said it best: "Trade cannot be free if it must balance at national borders. The United States can balance trade only by wrecking the enterpreneurial fabric of an interdependent global economy."

Another author whom I greatly admire, Tom Peters, argued that one of the most fundamental underpinning for a competitive economy are free and open markets. By closing markets, this bill is anticompetitive.

I know the bill is going to pass, but I want to be on the side of history. This is a bad bill and should be defeated.

Mr. Chairman, today we are playing political games with our country's international trade policy, and in my opinion, the losers will be the American people.

This package deal of the plant-closing bill and the trade bill is a political ploy designed to embarrass the President. The House could have debated the trade bill weeks ago, but the House Democratic leadership is so determined to force both bills simultaneously on the President that when the Senate failed to finish the plant-closing bill on schedule both bills were postponed until today.

The Democrats also seem willing to sacrific a competitive, prosperous U.S. economy in order to have a campaign plank for the fall Presidential elections. Governor Dukakis made it clear in announcing his Vice-Presidential choice yesterday that the Democrats intend to campaign on their ability to manage economic decline and promote protectionism. One of the clearest choices Americans will be asked to make this fall is between a Democratic Party that is hoping and planning for economic collapse, and a Republican Party that is working and planning to continue job creation and economic growth.

There are even more compelling reasons, however, to vote against this trade bill. I strongly oppose the bill for the same reasons I opposed the last trade bill. It is protectionist, threatening to plunge us into trade wars. It will cost Americans their jobs as our plants and farmers become victims of retaliatory measures by our trading partners and the economic slowdown which will surely follow. And, it will lower our standard of living by raising prices on goods which all of us, as consumers, purchase.

This bill also threatens to further destabilize markets by sending the dollar into a tailspin and throwing panic into investors who are haunted by the specter of rising protectionism. The threat of an economic cold war with our trading partners could help spark another stock market crash similar to the one last fall.

I sincerely believe that Congress is on the verge of passing the most damaging trade legislation in more than 50 years. Not since the passage of Smoot-Hawley in 1930 have we come so close to destroying the expansionist trade policy which has helped make this country both prosperous and powerful. The vote on this bill is the Smoot-Hawley equivalent for the 100th Congress, and, in my opinion, its impact on world trade and the U.S. economy could be just as devastating.

Like the current bill's supporters, the proponents of Smoot-Hawley had good intentions. They were only going to help an ailing industry, namely U.S. agriculture. But the end result was impenetrable trade barriers. Our trading allies retaliated by passing similar legislation. World trade collapsed, U.S. exports plummeted to roughly one-quarter of their 1929 level, and we entered into the Great Depression.

It is said that those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it. I cannot believe that we have so quickly forgotten the terrible economic depression resulting from Smoot-Hawley that we should be flirting with a repeat of that searing experience. And I certainly cannot understand why the Democratic Party of the 1980's wants to repeat the same mistake made by the Republican Party in the 1930's.

Unfortunately, the democratic leadership has found willing allies in the administration. Some of the President's advisers desperately want the President to sign a trade bill, and apparently they are willing to settle for a bad trade bill. In doing so, they are breaking faith with future generations by negotiating away the President's authority to protect the economic and foreign policy interests of all Americans. They will have contributed to a weakened Presidency in the future.

Instead of recommending a veto of the last trade bill based on its egregious trade provisions, the President's advisers latched onto the plant-closing notification language. Seldom have I seen administration strategy so poorly handled. In my opinion, their advice is misguided, and they will only succeed in tarnishing President Reagan's legacy of strong economic growth and prosperity. The administration deserves a share of the blame for not fighting for a protrade, progrowth trade bill.

This bill contains the same flawed trade provisions as H.R. 3. The combined effect of all of these changes in our trade policy sharply raises trade barriers and injects protectionism into U.S. trade policy, making it easier for a future administration to start a trade war, or harder to resist one.

The most damaging changes to our trade policy are the super 301 provisions, which strip authority from the President and transfer it to unelected bureaucrats. Only the President has the obligation to look out for the world economy and the national economic interest of all the American people. He should have the responsibility of signing off on all trade action. Yet, this bill removes his voice from some of the most significant trade policy decisions, making it easier for protectionist interests to maneuver the United States into a self-defeating cycle of retaliatory measures.

Under the new section 301 provisions, the USTR, our new trade czar, would be responsible for deciding which of our allies' trade practices are discriminatory. This unelected bureaucrat then would be required to decide what type of retaliatory actions to take against our trading partners who are unwilling to change their bad habits.

The bill does not require the President to initial any proposed trade actions. In fact, the bill deletes his ability to block actions which are not in the national economic interest. His only recourse in upholding the economic interest of all Americans is in extraordinary cases, where retaliatory actions would have an adverse impact on the U.S. economy substantially out of proportion to the actions' benefits.

I find this transfer of authority disturbing not only because it shifts the balance of power away from the President to an unelected official, but also because it could seriously undermine U.S. foreign policy. The USTR is not trained in foreign policy, nor is he privy to foreign policy decisions being made by the administration. Yet, he will be making unilateral policy decisions in the area of international trade that could adversely affect relations with our allies. It is naive to believe that retaliatory trade actions imposed against our allies would not affect our negotiations with them in other sensitive areas, such as weapons deployment or obtaining their support for U.S. foreign policy decisions.

Changes in section 201 trade actions also move our trade policy in the direction of protectionism. Injury standards are lowered to include factors that may be totally unrelated to our allies' trading practices. These include the inability of domestic firms to raise adequate capital for modernization and a firm's failure to maintain current levels of research and development expenditures. In my opinion, these actions only reward inefficiency, making it more difficult for U.S. firms to remain competitive at home and abroad.

The USTR isn't the only unelected official who benefits from the bill's transfer of authority. Findings of injury by the International Trade Commission would take effect unless the President directs otherwise. Under current law, these findings must be confirmed by the President. Again, the President's involvement in an area which has such significant economic and foreign policy implications is being whittled away.

This bill also imposes a gag rule on commissioners who disagree with an injury finding. Only commissioners who agree that a domestic firm is injured would be allowed to decide upon a remedy. Dissenting commissioners could not participate in making action recommendations to the President.

As I said, this bill moves the United States inexorably toward protectionism, trade wars, fewer jobs, and a lower standard of living. If my colleagues want an example of how getting tough with our trading partners can boomerang on our economic future they do not need to look any further than the United States-Japan microchip agreement. Like most other attempts at economic planning, there were unintended victims of this restrictive trade agreement. This time it was the crucial U.S. computer industry.

As George Gilder astutely pointed out in a recent article, all we ended up doing was to significantly raise the cost of microchips, create a severe shortage of a key memory chip called a D-Ram, and give the Japanese a key foothold in United States computer markets. Japanese semiconductor companies are making tremendous profits thanks to higher prices, and they are using these profits to fund R&D projects designed to overtake the U.S. lead in critical computer, software, and telecommunications technology.

It is time that the U.S. Congress wakes up and realizes that trade transcends national boundaries. Due in part to the telecommunications revolution, entrepreneurs have intergrated world commerce, opening up new opportunities for global capitalism. Once again, I believe George Gilder said it best: "Trade cannot be free if it must balance at national borders. The United States can balance trade only by wrecking the entrepreneurial fabric of an interdependent Global Economy."

I firmly believe that if we want to expand economic opportunities and prosperity for all Americans, then we must focus our attention on expanding trade, not shrinking it. As President John F. Kennedy succinctly said, "We must either trade or fade." Instead of bashing trade, we should work vigorously to tear down trade barriers. I believe we should move forward with bilateral free trade agreements, starting with a North American free trade area incorporating Canada, Mexico, and the Caribbean Basin countries. Creation of a North American free trade zone would provide both a carrot and a stick to get our other trading partners to open their markets to U.S. goods. While continuing the GATT negotiations, we also should press for bilateral expanded trade agreements with our trading partners.

And, instead of focusing on plant closings and managing economic decline, we should pursue a plant-opening policy to create even more jobs and a more competitive economy. We must focus on bringing employers and jobs to the depressed inner cities and rural areas through enterprise zones so that the poor and minorities can ascend the ladder of economic opportunity. We need to lower the capital gains rate to create capital for entrepreneurs and small businesses. And, we need to repeal the regressive payroll tax increase scheduled for 1990 which will impose a particularly harsh burden on small businesses and low-income workers.

Free trade is one of the fundamental cornerstones upon which free and prosperous nations are based. When we start chipping away at free trade then we jeopardize our economic freedom and the freedom of spirit which has blessed our country with boundless creative and entrepreneurial energy. This bill does more than chip away at the cornerstone; it literally undermines the foundation of free trade. I urge my colleagues to reject this bill.

For the record, I also intend to oppose the substitute being offered by my good friend, Congressman MICHEL. I strongly support the Caribbean Basin Initiative. In fact, I believe we should include the Caribbean Basin countries in a North American free trade area. I believe that the substitute will damage our relationship with these countries, as well as undermine their economies, which depend so heavily upon trade with the United States.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation, in strong support and hope it will pass with a veto-proof majority. I hope the President has the good sense to keep his word and to sign it.

I also rise particularly to call attention to a provision in this legislation which came from the Banking Committee in the House and the Banking Committee of the Senate and which seeks to deal with the problem of overwhelming debt in the developing world, especially in Latin America.

Some may ask what is this doing in a trade bill? But the fact is that one of the biggest problems for workers in the United States, for manufacturers and exporters in the United States is the loss of markets in the developing world, especially Latin America. We have suffered more in our trade balance during this decade in our loss of markets in Latin America than we have in the lack of markets in Japan.

We tend to ignore this fact.

It has meant literally millions of American jobs in the manufacturing sector.

At the same time it has done no benefit to our banks that hold these loans that are owed by the Latin American countries. They have had to reserve literally millions and millions of dollars against the bad exposure of these loans to them.

It can be worked out, there can be a solution. But inaction, the kind of inaction that we have gotten from the administration, the muddle-through approach of the Baker plan on Third World debt is not working and cannot work. We need a process to maximize the benefits to all of the players and minimize the losses. That means minimize the losses in jobs to Americans; to minimize the losses of jobs to Americans, to maximize the markets for American products, to minimize the hardship of the people in the developing world, to minimize the losses to our banks and thereby our losses to our taxpayers.

A hands-on approach which was included in this bill, a facility to repackage and restructure and reduce the debt of the developing world in an orderly and structured way is the best thing that we can do about an overwhelming problem. It is a projobs approach, it is a prodevelopment approach and ultimately, therefore, in the developing world a prodemocracy approach. If we care about the preservation of democracy in Mexico, in Brazil, and Argentina, we will pass this trade bill.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HOUGHTON].

Mr. HOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman very much.

This may not be the most intellectual speech that has been made, but it will be the shortest speech on H.R. 4848. There are six words: Go for it, it's long overdue.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, once again I rise in strong opposition to this omnibus trade legislation. It has a new number today, has been through several more printings, most recently with the plant closing provisions stricken, but the bill remains as dangerous as before.

In my view, the President was correct to veto this bill. But I tend to agree with the Wall Street Journal and the New York Times that he did not offer the right justifications. Events in this volatile political year served to focus attention on the plant closing provisions in the original bill at the expense of a thorough review of the rest of the bill which has serious shortcomings.

With its hundreds of small procedural changes to the trade laws, it will make retaliation the name of the game for U.S. trade policy.

International trade policy in this and most other countries is a continual battle between the overall national interest of free and open trade and sectoral interests which are having trouble competing in the international marketplace. In general, Congress tends to side with the various special interests while the President has the position and ability to make a fair assessment of the overall national interest. H.R. 4848 would unsettle this balance by wrenching away some of the President's decisionmaking authority and placing it with the USTR who, the thinking goes, will be more susceptible to arm twisting by special interest lobbies.

Section 301 amendments requiring mandatory retaliation and initiation of 301 cases are the best example of this subversion of the checks and balances that are currently associated with trade decisions. Removing Presidential consideration of the national interest from the process is absurd any way you look at it. He is the only individual with adequate information and accountability to make the difficult decision of when to retaliate. Keeping considerations such as national security and the national economic interest out of the equation may have political appeal to the domestic industry in question, but it doesn't make much sense for the Nation as a whole.

The transfer of authority problem is compounded by the Super 301 mechanism that will be established by this bill. Casting far and wide over a 2-year time period to initiate numerous mega-301 cases against several different nations is inappropriate and workable. USTR, short on manpower as it is, will be forced to make public declaration based on allegations it can't possibly have time to substantiate. This helter-skelter, vigilante-like procedure, while inciting the ire of our trading partners, will not, I'm convinced, achieve improved access for U.S. business.

Furthermore, the entire Super 301 structure fails to account for our own trade restrictions which are not insignificant. When we take our allies to task, labeling them in front of the world as outlaws and demanding that their barriers be dismantled immediately, how will we respond when they request that we dismantle our steel, textile, meat, and agriculture quotas under their timetables?

On the other hand, if you believe that our trading partners will do nothing to restrict our exports after we use mechanisms in this bill to slap quotas and tariffs on their products, then vote for this bill.

While conferees decided wisely not to transfer decisionmaking authority to USTR in section 201 cases, I strongly oppose procedures devised here to ensure that denial of import relief from fairly traded products will be the highly exceptional situation. These amendments smack of an entitlement which ignores the reality that compensation is always owed to our trading partners when meaningful import relief is granted under 201. As 201 is transformed into an automatic relief statute, U.S. exporters are sure to suffer significant casualties. Unfortunately, these competititve industries have been unable to contact you because they don't know yet whether or when they will become victims of protectionism in an effort to help a few firms that may not have made the business decisions necessary to become successful.

What continues to concern me as this bill moves forward is the myth that it will increase competitiveness and dramatically improve the trade deficit. Members making these statements will admit in private that, by and large, while we have problems in international trade, we cannot blame our trade deficit on foreign trading practices. Economists agree that the real culprits are out-of-control Federal spending, the necessity of financing the spending with foreign capital, and the voracious consumption habits of U.S. consumers.

I have real misgivings about the body spending 3 years on a bill like H.R. 4848 and much less time successfully addressing the budget deficit. Even in this bill spending is increased $6.1 billion over 6 years. For example, potential benefits of the TAA program are increased by about 40 percent as the program is expanded to cover oil and gas workers and workers not directly impacted by imports, so-called secondary workers. A quick review of the bill's index reveals a myriad of expensive, inflationary special interest gifts for such industries as steel, agricultrue, telecommunications, lab and semiconductors.

We have heard over and over again how exceptional a bill this is because 17 different committees had a hand in writing a piece of it. In my view, bragging about how many pounds it weighs would be better justification for enacting it.

As I see it, H.R. 4848 remains the frenzied product of congressional panic over an import boom which no longer exists. Today, July 13, we are already 4 months into a resurgence in exports which must be preserved not threatened.

I recall how often former Ambassador Brock used to remind us that keeping the international trading system functioning is like riding a bicycle: forward momentum must be maintained otherwise disaster ensues. This bill, save for provisions buried deep within it, such as negotiating authority and the harmonized system, goes in exactly the wrong direction.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on H.R. 4848.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRANE. I am happy to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to talk a little about this point, but I did not get a chance to do that, and I am glad the gentleman has covered this point so eloquently. It has been stated that unemployment has dropped so rapidly that we now have economists telling us that the Central Bank of the United States must tighten up on interest rates to slow down the economy because they fear, if there are too many people working, that it is going to engender inflation. That shows a fundamental flaw in the thinking of the critics of our economic system.

Inflation is not caused by too many people working, nor is it healthy for the consumer to shut off our markets, as the gentleman has pointed out. It is exactly the time that we are working out a free trade zone with Canada, and we should be extending it to Mexico and Latin America to help those Third World Latin debtor nations get markets in order to earn the foreign exchange with which to finance their debt and get their own economies growing so they can afford to buy something from Illinois or New York or Florida.

Otherwise we are going to have the type of retaliation as evidenced in the gentleman's comments about the Super 301 authority that is going to turn back the open market idea that has become the hallmark of the new surging Western free market economics of recent times.

So I am absolutely convinced that the gentleman's comments are on target, and his perspicacity and leadership are very much appreciated. We may not be on the winning side on this vote, but I believe with all my heart, I say to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois, that we are on the winning side of history because this is another Smoot-Hawley revisited.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I am sad to say that Santayana observed that those who fail to learn the lessons of history are condemned to relive it, and while this may not be Smoot-Hawley, this is the closest thing to Smoot-Hawley that this Congress has turned out in the way of trade legislation in the past 50 years.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have very little time left, but I wish to yield such time as he may consume, which may amount to the balance of the time that I have left, to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL]. If there is any surplus time left after that, I will yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding time to me.

I must at the very outset compliment both the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] for having aerated the discussion in the interest of free trade and in opposition to those inhibitions to our trading freely with our trading partners around the globe. With a few exceptions, I would be inclined to subscribe totally to the comments made by both those gentlemen, but there are some areas that I think needed some correction or some remedy.

Second, I wish to compliment the committee for its long and arduous task of putting together, with give-and-take from many quarters, and crafting the kind of bill we now are considering again today.

I have taken this time for a third reason only to explain very briefly that in order to qualify for the motion to recommit, I am going to have to respond to the Sepaker by telling him quite frankly that I am opposed to the bill, but if it were not for the fact that I wanted to offer that motion to recommit, I might very well be voting for this piece of legislation, as I said, because I think on balance the committee has done a pretty splendid job. But I have a very pesky problem having to do with ethanol, and that will be the subject of our motion to recommit. As I indicated, in order to qualify to offer that motion, I will have to assure the Members that I will vote against the bill, and I will obviously be obliged to do so.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, the time is long overdue for us to join the ranks of our trade competitors in placing the issue of trade on top of the national agenda, not only for this year but for years to come. Our Nation needs a comprehensive trade policy, and I appreciate your efforts in making sure that before the new administration takes office, there will be an omnibus trade legislation enacted. I am also pleased to see that the advance notice of plant closing bill passed the Senate and that we are considering it for passage today as well. The practice of notifying workers 60 days in advance of a plant closing is common among our European trade competitors, and we need to awaken to the fact that such practice is necessary to ensure the well-being of American factory workers.

During much of this year, we have seen an encouraging reduction in the U.S. trade deficit largely due to the lower value of the dollar and subsequent increase in exports. However, the lower dollar and an increase in exports are not enough to solve the problem of our huge trade deficit. We need to improve our Nation's overall competitiveness, and the trade bill before us today will do that.

Our Nation is still a leader in the world economy, but that leadership position is weakening. Other nations are catching up with us and some have surpassed us in a number of areas. We cannot let this go on. We cannot afford to enter into the 21st century lagging behind our foreign competitors in world trade.

I have had the opportunity to be involved in formulating some of the provisions of this bill relating to international banking, debt, and currency exchange rates and appreciate that those provisions remain intact. For the sake of the long-term health of our economy, but more importantly, for the sake of protecting American jobs for now and the future, we need to pass this bill. I urge my colleagues to give it their full support.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4848, the omnibus trade bill and urge its passage. The bill is landmark legislation that is vitally needed to enhance U.S. trade and competitiveness.

Mr. Chairman, the bill should be approved as is. Specifically, I am strongly opposed to any effort to strike a small, but important, provision concerning the Caribbean Basin Initiative [CBI] and ethanol.

I am a member of the Congressional Alcohol Fuels Caucus and believe we must promote the development and utilization of alcohol fuels such as ethanol. However, I do not believe that we must do so at the expense of our Caribbean neighbors.

Mr. Chairman, CBI governments and private firms were encouraged by Congress and the administration to explore ethanol through the CBI programs. Taking us at our word, several projects were started providing jobs and export earnings. In 1986, in effect, we reneged on our commitment when a little noticed amendment was slipped into the Tax Reform Act changing the CBI rules just for ethanol. These changes essentially require all the raw materials, or feed stock, to come from the region and were disingenuously promoted as helping the Caribbean. Just the opposite has occurred. Since the 1986 act the CBI ethanol industry has greatly suffered.

Of the three projects developed in the region, one in Costa Rica and two in Jamaica, two are shut down and a third has reduced its operations. Workers have lost jobs and the future is uncertain. All three of these projects are making serious attempts to use local raw materials when available and feasible.

The 1986 act simply goes too far and runs counter to the CBI. A healthy CBI ethanol industry is no threat to U.S. producers or farmers. In fact, given the current drought we should welcome help in stabilizing our market shortage.

The trade bill provision does not permanently change the 1986 act—rather it takes middle ground. Recognizing the concerns of U.S. producers, it temporarily suspends the extra CBI ethanol rules through 1989. During this time export caps are mandated as are studies by the GAO and the International Trade Commission on the economics of the industry and whether the 1986 act changes are reasonable. In short, it is balanced and fair.

This distinguished minority leader and my fellow members of the Alcohols Fuels Caucus should not fear the facts being laid out.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4848, the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988.

Like many omnibus bills which come to the House floor, this legislation contains many provisions which I strongly support—such as repeal of the windfall profits tax—as well as provisions whose contributions to improving our Nation's balance of trade and international competitiveness are questionable—I will cite as one example the need for a "competitiveness policy council" as clearly unnecessary in light of the existing National Economic Commission. On balance, however, the legislation before us is a fair compromise deserving our support.

As ranking Republican member of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, I served as a House conferee on 7 of the 17 subconferences which put together this legislation. I feel that a number of new initiatives agreed to in those subconferences are worthy and I would like to take a moment to highlight just a few:

First, we have reorganized the National Bureau of Standards to balance their traditional mission of providing measurements, calibrations and quality assurance standards with the increased need for them to further assist U.S. industry in the development of new technologies. To reflect this reorganization and enhanced mission, we have changed the name of the Bureau to the National Institute of Standards and Technology.

Second, in recognition of the importance of semiconductors not only to our national security but also to the production of competitive U.S. products, we have created a National Advisory Committee on Semiconductors with the responsibility for devising a national semiconductor strategy to assure continued U.S. leadership in this vital electronics field.

Third, to facilitate development and commercialization of the recent amazing breakthroughs in high temperature superconductivity, we have created a Presidential National Commission on Superconductivity to review major policy issues regarding U.S. applications of the now daily advancements in research in superconductivity.

And last, this legislation creates a new program to assist our Nation's universities and colleges in replacing their obsolete research facilities. Here I would just note that we are continuing to refine this needed revitalization program in negotiations currently ongoing with the Senate on H.R. 4418, the National Science Foundation authorization for fiscal year 1989 through 1993. The language in the bill before us today is similar to that already approved by the House in H.R. 4418.

Mr. Chairman, I support passage of H.R. 4848 and urge my colleagues to join me in its approval.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank my colleagues for working to bring this bill to us today. It's important that we consider it and move it on to President Reagan. I hope he will sign it and help out the American worker.

Opponents have used rhetorical devices and catch phrases to cloud this issue. And I can see why. It's hard for some, particularly this administration, to accept that unfair trade practices exist. How many times over the life of this trade bill, and of the textile bill before it, have we heard that our efforts at trade equity are not unnecessary, they are protectionist. I just can't agree with that invective. I've got too many unemployed textile workers to believe the current system works.

These are people who worked hard, their industry made significant investments in modern technology, they did everything they were supposed to do, but the system didn't ensure the imports wouldn't continue to pour in.

Two years ago, we passed a textile bill that was ultimately vetoed by President Reagan. We received a letter from several Cabinet members stating that the legislation was not necessary to maintain a strong, viable domestic textile and apparel industry. They referred to the level of protection contemplated by the bill being contrary to free market principles.

Well the truth of the matter is the world doesn't operate according to a free market philosophy, however much we might want it to. The United States may be trying to follow the rules, but many of our trading partners aren't. So do we sit back and philosophize about markets or do we get tough and demand each country treat us the way we treat it? I think it's time we decide what the rules will be instead of having foreign producers and countries decide for us.

This bill requires the President to take action against violations of trade agreements and strengthens existing laws that address unfair trade practices. Not foreign trade—but unfair foreign trade. There is a difference as thousands of American workers and their families have found.

There is currently a detailed process for determining unfair practices and what action can be taken in response. But that process must be implemented before it can be effective and this bill transfers authority for determining unfair trade practices to the U.S. Trade Representative.

Of greatest interest to many of my constituents today are the improvements to trade adjustment assistance and particularly the Workers Readjustment Program. It is directed at workers who have lost jobs due to shutdowns and layoffs.

I hope President Reagan will sign this bill. It's time to save American jobs and the American economic base. We've already lost key components. Our security can be jeopardized if we rely too heavily on foreign suppliers. We're being foolish if we ignore the risk of such shortsightedness.

Let's not have our trade policies dictated to us. Let's take the initiative for a change and set our own course.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the bill before us today, H.R. 4848, a bill which was drafted as a compromise to H.R. 3, and which has wide bipartisan support. I urge that it be adopted by this body.

Title X, subtitle A of H.R. 4848 deals with unfair practices in ocean and related land-based transportation activity, and it is identical to the compromise worked out by the conferees to maritime provisions in H.R. 3. For more detailed information on the nature of the compromise, I would refer interested parties to House Report 100-576.

The 1987 Annual Report of the Federal Maritime Commission, which is charged with administering the laws designed to keep our maritime trades free and open, states that 1987 was the most active year in the history of the Commission in terms of identifying and correcting conditions unfavorable to shipping in the U.S. foreign commerce. Japan, Korea, Taiwan, People's Republic of China, Peru, and Colombia were the targets of Commission investigations.

Clearly, free trade is an elusive commodity, and I think we all realize that. And even though the Federal Maritime Commission has authority to investigate unfavorable conditions, the authority is insufficient to enable it to effectively counter the sophisticated practices that are employed to disadvantage U.S. operators of merchant vessels. When my committee held hearings on the subject last year, the Commission asked that its existing authority be strengthened.

The agreement reached by the conferees on maritime issues, I believe, takes a step to improve the ability of the Federal Maritime Commission to counter unfair practices. It is not an overly ambitious step, but it represents a framework that may be built upon in the future, if it is found to be inadequate in certain areas.

Three important things have been accomplished. First, intermodal activities are clearly and unequivocally included as activities subject to investigation. This is a significant addition to the existing laws, because so much of the oceanborne cargo moving to and from the United States is under a single bill of lading, and moves the first and last mile by rail or by road.

Second, the Commission has been given additional penalties with which to counter unfair shipping practices. A major problem it has had administering the law is the lack of any but the most draconian penalties.

Finally, the process has been expedited so that a proceeding must be completed within 210 days, including a single, discretionary extension. This is to alleviate the delays we have come to expect from those who are the targets of Commission investigations.

The conference managers agreed to limit the scope of the act to liner carriers. However, there remains a concern that some practices by foreigners may play a role in inhibiting market opportunities by U.S. operators of non-liner vessels. I certainly hope that the Federal Maritime Commission will inform the Congress and the President as to the need for expanded scrutiny of oceanborne transportation activity to include bulk, tanker or other noncommon carrier operations. In any event, it is important to remember that the bill addresses vessel common carriage. The type of cargo, and the method of packaging that cargo, is irrelevant to the act.

The managers also agreed to a simple standard for determining an unfair condition, which combines harm to U.S. operators with the concept of reciprocity. In other words, when the policies of a foreign nation toward American carriers are different from our policies toward their carriers, and that causes harm to U.S. operators, an unfair condition exists. Likewise, the acts of private foreign persons may cause a parallel condition.

A determination to investigate certain conduct by foreign governments or persons is discretionary, so that the Commission not be burdened with petitions of a frivolous or harassing nature. On the other hand, legitimate complaints should not be summarily rejected, and the Presidential override of a Commission decision—provided in the act—should come into play after the investigation is completed, and not invoked for the purpose of dismissing a complaint.

The changes to the maritime portion of the trade bill have addressed the concerns of the administration, as well as affected industry groups. Mr. Chairman, I wholeheartedly support this bill because I feel that it furthers the cause of free and fair trade that we in this country espouse.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, today we are considering our second omnibus trade bill. This measure, the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (H.R. 4848), is identical to H.R. 3 with the exception of two contentious provisions which wisely were dropped.

This bill does contain several important changes or adjustments to current law, such as GATT negotiating authority for the President, new trade law tools to strengthen our hand in international trade negotiations, strengthened protections for intellectual property, and a repeal of the windfall profits tax. However, these provisions do not change the fact that the overall impact of this 1,128-page bill will be protectionist. In fact, many of these important provisions could stand on their own as separate bills and, therefore, should not be used as excuses for passing this catchall trade bill.

The purpose of this bill reads "to enhance the competitiveness of American industry, and for other purposes." In this statement of purpose lie the major problems with this legislation. To begin with, I have grave problems with its supporters' definition of "competitiveness." I believe competitiveness should be judged by the following three questions which are based on key economic variables:

First, does the policy increase the Nation's standard of living and economic growth?,

Second, does the policy increase consumer choice and reduce the costs of goods and services?, and Third, does the policy expand employment opportunities?.

The policy direction laid out by this trade bill will fail on all three counts.

Second, the clause "and for other purposes" refers to all the provisions which special interest groups have included in the legislation. The bill is endorsed by business and labor organizations solely because it contains something for every American industry, association and worker. What has not been analyzed closely in this 3-year debate over trade policy, Mr. Chairman, is the cumulative effect of these special interest provisions on our trade policy and trade deficit.

In the last year, U.S. real net exports improved by over $20 billion—a positive sign that the United States is once again becoming a stronger competitor in the international economy. The improvement in the trade balance has contributed roughly a half a point to GNP growth in the United States. Much of the improvement can be attributed to the drastic decline in the value of the dollar.

The falling dollar was supposed to strengthen our trade position and quell protectionist sentiment in Congress. As I noted, the depreciation in the value of the dollar has made a strong improvement in our trade picture, but the structural imbalance as well as congressional appeal for trade protection remains.

Although the most protectionist provisions were struck from the trade bill, H.R. 3, was by no means harmless and I believe the President was right to veto it. Both H.R. 3 and HJ.R. 4848 would enhance, at the expense of the President, the power of the U.S. Congress—as well as trade unions and special interest groups—to retaliate at will against our foreign trading partners. Such retaliation would engender counterretaliation against us by our trading partners, with the effect of closing markets, not opening them.

This trade bill also contains a provision to prohibit the Federal Reserve from dealing in Government securities directly with a foreign-owned firm, unless that firm's home country allows United States-owned securities dealers equal access to that country's securities. This provision would specifically affect Japanese securities firms. There is clear evidence that United States financial institutions are treated unfairly in the Japanese Government bond market, but this is a situation that should be resolved between United States and Japanese financial authorities, not by discouraging foreign capital inflows that are necessary to financing our deficits.

It is unfortunate that the U.S. Congress is more interested in the political appeal of protectionist trade legislation than making responsible decisions about the true nature of our trade deficit. The fact is, the U.S. trade deficit closely parallels our budget deficit. I do not believe you will see a significant improvement in the U.S. trade deficit until the budget deficit is substantially reduced. Finally, with our trade deficit improving, this measure is unnecessary and has great potential to aggravate our trade picture. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to resist the political pressure to support this omnibus trade bill.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, I urge your continued strong support for retaining a small but important provision in the revised trade bill

(H.R. 4848) regarding ethanol and the Caribbean Basin Initiative [CBI].

Ethanol, a gasoline octane enhancer, may be produced and exported to the U.S. under the CBI Program. Our Government encouraged ethanol development in the Caribbean and several U.S. firms and Caribbean governments made investments. However, a little noticed amendment buried in the 1986 Tax Reform Act changed the CBI rules for ethanol. The 1986 act reneges on the commitments we made and has nearly destroyed the CBI ethanol industry—in the process several thousands of jobs have been lost.

Such drastic action was neither warranted or needed to protect U.S. ethanol producers and farmers. Consider these facts:

The CBI ethanol industry is small. In 1987 according to U.S. Customs data, CBI exports were less than 3 percent of the U.S. market.

CBI ethanol does not compete with domestic producers. A 1986 report of the International Trade Commission found no credible evidence of competition or displacements.

The greatest problem facing U.S. ethanol is lack of supply. The current drought is unfortunately exacerbating this situation. According to Alcohol Update, "as many as 100-200 million gallons of ethanol production may be forced to shut down by late summer."

A recent article in the industry journal Alcohol Week states, "Ethanol from the Caribbean basin could substantially boost ethanol-gasoline blends market share in 'coastal' gasoline markets where blend sales have been historically low. * * * These areas have a low blends market share because they are unable to obtain ethanol from the Midwest, where the majority of the ethanol producing facilities in the U.S. are located."

The amendment in the trade bill is modest, limited in scope and only temporarily modifies current law. Specifically, it: First, applies only to existing facilities—only 3 of 5 facilities in the region are capable of producing ethanol; second, by its terms it does not permanently change U.S. law—rather it temporarily suspends the 1986 act changes through 1989; third, sets a per facility cap of 20 million gallons (no more than 29 million has ever been exported from the region); and fourth, mandates a study by GAO and the International Trade Commission on the effects of the 1986 changes and to guide long-term policy. In short, the amendment is balanced and fair.

The opponents of the CBI ethanol amendment also raise as a red herring European wine and transshipment. However, the U.S. Customs service has consistently found that CBI ethanol is a manufactured product of the region. Second, restricting CBI producers to the purchase of new materials only from the region is discriminatory and was not part of the original CBI law. The CBI is designed to aid our Caribbean neighbors and not to attack European farm policy. Finally, the opponents fail to recognize the commitment of CBI ethanol producers to actually use local raw materials or feedstocks whenever available and economically feasible. Substantial investments in new sugar cane lands, sugar, fermentation and distillation factories—and several thousand jobs—are in jeopardy.

I urge my colleagues to oppose any effort to strike or weaken the CBI ethanol provision from the trade bill by amendment or by a motion to recommit.

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the passage of H.R. 4848, the revised omnibus trade bill. This bill is exactly identical to the trade bill, H.R. 3, which was vetoed (and overwhelmingly overridden by the House with my support) by the President, except for the fact that the new trade bill does not contain the provisions requiring 60-day notification of plant-closing or provisions regarding the export of Alaskan oil.

I am full in support of the passage of H.R. 4848. There are many important provisions in this bill, including import relief, Third World debt relief, export expansion and agricultural export enhancement. Also provided are very important provisions which effect our Nation's workers, including worker retraining and education programs, dislocated worker programs and my legislation addressing dropout prevention and reentry.

However, while I continue in my support for the need to pass into law this trade bill, I am particularly concerned that today we are not passing the strongest and most effective bill that we can. As a former union official, I am concerned that we have been forced to separate out the plant-closing provisions in order to make this legislation more palatable for the President. This concerns me. I have negotiated many notification plans for workers, some for as long as 6 months. The 60-day provision is not that outlandish of a request, particularly when we are talking about communities which will lose their economic base and workers who will lose their jobs.

Again, while I truly wish that the plant-closing provision was still apart of the bill, I am fully in support of the passage of the trade bill before us today and encourage my colleagues to also vote in support.

We know that the Reagan administration's trade performance has been abysmal. The current trade deficit runs at a level five times higher than the level when the President took office. Mr. Reagan's answer to our country's trade problems was to veto legislation that the Congress has diligently worked on for 3 years. It is truly an understatement to say that this trade bill is crucially needed, and it is certainly my hope that Mr. Reagan will, this time, listen closely to the Congress and sign into law this bill.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4848, the second omnibus trade bill. As we all know, this bill does not contain the 60-day notification of plant closings, nor the provisions on Alaskan oil imports, two sections of the original trade legislation that drew President Reagan's veto. I am hopeful that H.R. 4848, stripped of these two provisions, will be passed by the House and ultimately sent to the President for his signature. I would like to commend Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI and Senator LLOYD BENTSEN for their hard work and patience in guiding this important measure through the legislative process. I am pleased that this House has passed a plant closing bill—albeit separate from this bill.

Although I strongly support H.R. 4848, I have mixed feeling about the language relating to nations running large trade surpluses with the United States. I deeply regret that the bill that we are considering does not include the Gephardt amendment, which would have forced the President to take retaliatory action against these countries. Although the legislation does contain the so-called "super 301" provisions to respond to unfair foreign trade practices that were contained in the Senate bill, I would have preferred the stronger provisions contained in the House measure. Our trade partners must be put on notice that if they wish to have free access to our markets, we must have equally free access to theirs. H.R. 4848 makes this point, but the Gephardt amendment would have sent a much stronger message.

I would also like to support the new worker adjustment components of the trade bill. H.R. 3 expands title III of the Job Training Partnership Act, which targets services to dislocated workers. This section will include job search assistance, job development, training and retraining, as well as a State dislocated workers office authorized to respond quickly to plant closings and major layoffs in the State. I am especially pleased at the expansion of services to dislocated workers. Finally, I am gratified that the bill continues the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program and makes it more readily available to workers displaced by plant closings and layoffs. Only a strong, coordinated Federal, State, and local response to this problem can help put our people and our communities back on their feet.

As a conferee to the education section of the trade bill, I am pleased that the measure includes provisions that would create programs for secondary school basic skills, dropout prevention, math and science instruction and foreign language teaching improvement. In our increasingly competitive world, we need more than ever to educate our young citizens in an effective and productive manner. I am also pleased that the trade bill recognizes the important role that community colleges play in educating and training our Americans workers.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4848.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of title X of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988. This title, known as the Foreign Shipping Practices Act of 1988, gives the Federal Maritime Commission [FMC] authority to investigate whether or not certain laws, activities, or practices of foreign governments or other entities involved in maritime services are responsible for unfair international trade practices in merchant shipping.

The key element in this legislation is that in order for the FMC to move against a foreign country or a foreign vessel operator, it has to establish that the laws or practices of that country adversely affect American vessel operators and, second, that the conditions that adversely affect American carriers do not similarly exist for the carriers of that foreign country in the United States under our laws.

If the FMC does find that laws or practices of a country cause unfair trading conditions and these two standards are met, then the Commission can take action against the foreign carrier who is causing the problems or whose government is responsible for the unfair trade practices.

Mr. Chairman, I want to applaud the chairman of our Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, Hon. WALTER JONES, for the manner in which he has worked with all of the members of our committee in developing this maritime title.

Earlier this year there were several legislative alternatives being considered. Working together under Chairman JONES' leadership, we have prepared a bill that is properly drawn and tempered with reasonable standards and conditions. We have developed language that will help eliminate the kinds of unfair trade practices that have caused American companies so much trouble in international maritime trade. I am pleased to note that the tone of this legislation is very similar to a bill that I introduced last year in an effort to focus attention on the unfair trade practices facing our American merchant marine.

I also feel the administration will be able to accept this language since we have either toned down or eliminated most of the provisions that spokesmen for the administration had previously opposed.

Those of us from the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee who have been concerned that unfair trade practices were slowly but surely killing our international shipping companies believe that this legislation will give our American companies an even break so they can compete in the international trade.

Mr. Chairmen, I urge passage of this maritime title of the trade bill.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise in strong support of this legislation, in particular, title IV—Agricultural Trade—on which the House and Senate Agriculture Committees worked so long and hard. This bill and in particular this title espouse trade objectives for the United States which indeed all the Members of this body should fully support. With regard to agricultural policy, certainly this body has no argument with our efforts to provde our agricultural commodities for export at competitive prices or to support the principle of free and fair trade in agricultural commodities or to seek the elimination of barriers to agricultural trade.

In formulating this legislation, the Agriculture Committees focused primarily on needed improvements in the foreign trade operations of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. No new programs are established but improvements are made to existing programs which over the last few years have been successful in increasing exports of agricultural commodities. Additionally, the committees recognize that the Congress has increasingly requested from the Department of Agriculture more and more trade information and services without providing additional assistance to the Department. We are attempting to correct that in this bill by authorizing an increase in personnel and operating funds for the Department's Foreign Agricultural Service.

As a reminder to my colleagues, I would like to spell out again the major provisions of title IV which are as follows:

SUMMARY OF MAJOR PROVISIONS OF TITLE IV—AGRICULTURAL TRADE

AGRICULTURAL TRADE POLICY

The Conference agreement will provide that it is the policy of the United States to provide agricultural commodities for export at competitive prices; to support the principle of free and fair trade in agricultural commodities; to support the negotiating objectives set forth in the Conference agreement; and to seek the elimination of barriers to agricultural trade.

LONG-TERM AGRICULTURAL TRADE STRATEGY REPORTS

The Conference agreement will require the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare annual long-term agricultural trade strategy reports establishing policy goals for United States agricultural trade and exports. The reports must set forth recommended levels of spending on international activities of the Department of Agriculture for 1, 5, and 10 year periods.

TRIGGERED MARKETING LOAN

The Conference agreement will require the President to submit a certification to Congress no later than 45 days after January 1, 1990, as to whether there has been significant progress toward achieving an agreement with respect to agricultural trade under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). If the President cannot certify that there has been significant progress toward reaching an agreement, the President must instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to implement a marketing loan program for the 1990 crops of wheat, feed grains and soybeans unless the President determines that the implementation of a marketing loan would harm further negotiations. If the President so determines, an expanded Export Enhancement Program must be implemented unless the implementation of such a program would be a substantial impediment to achieving an agreement under the GATT. The President is authorized to stop the implementation of either of these programs at any time if they have their intended effect, namely, they spur the GATT negotiations and the President determines that continued implementation would harm further negotiations.

EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

The Conference agreement will extend the authorization for the export enhancement program (EEP) through 1990 and increase the ceiling on the value of commodities that can be used under that program from $1.5 billion to $2.5 billion. The Conference agreement also provides that in carrying out the program, the Secretary of Agriculture may consider for participation all interested United States exporters, processors, users, and foreign purchasers, and may give priority to sales to countries that have traditionally purchased United States agricultural commodities and products.

TARGETED EXPORT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

The Conference agreement will authorize an increase in the level of funding for the Targeted Export Assistance Program (TEA) for 1988 from $110,000,000 to $215,000,000. This increase is subject to appropriations. The TEA program is also amended to provide discretionary authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to provide compensation for expenses incurred by trade associations in defending countervailing duty actions instituted after January 1, 1986, in foreign countries.

DAIRY EXPORT INCENTIVE PROGRAM

The Conference agreement will require that payment in commodities under the Dairy Export Incentive Program be made in the form of generic commodity certificates. Further, if the generic commodity certificates are exchanged for dairy products, the Secretary of Agriculture must ensure that the dairy products are sold for export and that the sales do not displace usual United States export sales of dairy products.

AGRICULTURAL TRADE WITH COUNTRIES WITH LARGE TRADE SURPLUSES

The Conference agreement will provide that if a country has a substantial positive trade balance with the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, in consultation with the Secretary of State, may develop an appropriate plan under which that country may purchase United States agricultural commodities for use in development activities in developing countries.

FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL SERVICE

The Conference agreement will strengthen the Foreign Agricultural Service (FAS) of the Department of Agriculture by providing for an overall increase in authorized appropriations for fiscal years 1988 through 1990 of $20,000,000. The increase is to be used for general market development activities, including market development efforts in developing countries, and to increase in number and quality of international trade shows. The Conference agreement will also provide for a minimum level of FAS personnel of 900 and would call for the designation of senior FAS officers as Minister-Counsellors.

RECIPROCAL MEAT INSPECTION

The Conference agreement will provide that if the Secretary of Agriculture determines that a foreign country applies meat inspection standards that are not based on scientific standards, the Secretary must consult with the United States Trade Representative and they must make a recommendation to the President as to what action should be taken. The President may require that a meat article produced in the foreign country not be permitted entry into the United States unless it is determined that the meat article has met the standards applicable to meat articles in commerce within the United States.

TRADE WITH JAPAN

The Conference agreement will provide that it is the sense of Congress that the import barriers imposed by Japan on agricultural products, including rice, citrus, and beef should be removed. The provision draws an analogy between those import barriers and the barriers recently determined by a GATT panel to be inconsistent with the GATT.

TRADE WITH KOREA

The Conference agreement will provide that it is the sense of Congress that Korea should permit greater access to its markets by United States beef producers. Further, the United States Trade Representative should aggressively pursue negotiations to gain greater access to the Korean market for United States beef and should try to achieve a reduction in beef import tariffs imposed by Korea.

WOOD AND WOOD PRODUCTS

The Conference agreement will make wood and wood products fully eligible for use in Public Law 480 market development projects and in the short and intermediate term export credit guarantee programs. The substitute will also establish a cooperative national forest products marketing program that is designed to improve the competitiveness of the United States forest products industry.

MARKETING ORDERS

The Conference agreement will provide for an additional period during which marketing order requirements could be in effect if the Secretary of Agriculture determines it is necessary to prevent circumvention of a marketing order by imports. The necessity for such additional period must be reviewed, on request, every 3 years. The additional period can be no longer than 35 days and the Secretary must take certain issues into consideration when deciding whether to establish the additional period.

IMPORTED MEAT AND POULTRY PRODUCTS

The Conference agreement will require the Secretary of Agriculture, within 90 days after enactment of the Act, to submit a report to Congress specifying the planned distribution of resources of the Department of Agriculture for sampling imports of meat, poultry, and egg products to ensure compliance with the Federal Meat Inspection Act, the Poultry Products Inspection Act, and the Egg Products Inspection Act governing permitted levels of pesticide, drugs and other residues in such products. The report must also respond to a 1987 Inspector General audit report.

OTHER PROVISIONS

The Conference agreement also contains a provision concerning the export credit guarantee program. The Conference agreement also calls for studies to be conducted concerning egg imports, rose imports, the Canadian wheat import licensing scheme, the use of intermediate export credit, dairy imports, sugar imports, and honey imports.

Mr. Chairman, when this legislation was passed by the House earlier this year it contained two provisions which the administration found objectionable and on which the President focussed in vetoing H.R. 3. Those provisions have been removed from H.R. 4848, and I trust this action will result in support of this legislation by all my colleagues here in the House. Of course, there still are items in the bill that some will not agree with, while there are others which many of us strongly support. But everything being considered, this is as balanced a piece of legislation as we could get considering the intricacies and comprehensive scope of the subject bill.

I would like to commend Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and the members of the Ways of Means Committee who have led the way in this endeavor, and all the other committees and members, including the Committee on Agriculture, for their contribution to this legislation.

I also commend all the Members of the Senate for their work and cooperation in this regard and offer a very special word of appreciation and commendation to the senior Senator from Texas, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, the Honorable LLOYD M. BENTSEN. His diligent work and exemplary leadership has led us to this point. Hopefully, passage of this legislation with the benefits it will provide to all Americans in years to come will be a tribute to his dedication in making America a better country and placing this country's industry and commerce in a fair and equitable position in world trade.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of section 4603 of title X, the Maritime title. That section reestablishes the authority of the Department of Commerce to provide assistance to mobile trade fair projects. This section is very similar to H.R. 2192, a bill I introduced last year for the purpose of promoting mobile trade fairs. I am most pleased to see my efforts finally bear fruit.

The managers intend that by simply eliminating the specific authorization language, including the sunset provision, that the Department of Commerce will retain authority, within current budgetary constraints, to support mobile trade fairs as an additional tool to encourage and promote U.S. exports. The managers intend that this program include support for the operation of an exhibition ship that is acting as an at-sea international management export company representing the manufacturers of American-made products. The authority is left with the Department of Commerce as the appropriate agency to oversee trade promotion activities within the Government, however, the managers recognize that as U.S.-flag carriers are the only recipients of support under this provision that DOT will have to lend its support.

I urge all the agencies involved to cooperate and to assure that our Nation becomes a true innovator in this important project.

Mr. DAVIS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the comments made by my distinguished colleague from North Carolina and chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, the Honorable WALTER JONES. Title X of H.R. 4848, known as the Foreign Shipping Practices Act of 1988, gives the Federal Maritime Commission authority to investigate allegations of unfair trade practices by foreign governments or other persons subject to the jurisdiction of the FMC.

Title X of this bill is identical to title X of H.R. 3 which represented an acceptable compromise between H.R. 1290, the original House text of which I was a cosponsor, and the original Senate-passed text.

The final conference report differs from the House-passed text in several respects. Protections for U.S.-flag bulk operators have been eliminated, provisions mandating investigations where at least 25 percent of a class of goods were carried by a foreign carrier between the United States and that foreign country were eliminated, and finally the conference standard for imposing sanctions centers on a "reciprocity" test versus the House-passed "unreasonable impairment of access" test. These changes appear to have eliminated, in large part, administration objections to passage of a maritime title.

While I remain concerned that the removal of certain provisions weakens the bill to some degree, I am convinced that the Commission will have sufficient authority to take action against foreign entities which establish barriers which adversely affect our U.S.-flag carriers.

I am particularly encouraged by the inclusion of authority to investigate allegations relating to unfair intermodal transportation practices of our trading partners. Mr. Chairman, this authority granted to the Commission has been carefully drafted and I trust the Commission will adhere strictly to the requirements and enforcement provisions set forth in the text of this bill.

I am, indeed, hopeful that this bill will go a long way to ensuring that our liner operators receive the same equal opportunity to compete as foreign carriers now and have been guaranteed under our regulatory regime.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, although the bill upon which we are voting today is detailed and addresses many areas of concern in the trade policy area, I hope that with its passage we do not assume we can retire from the trade area, thinking we have resolved many of the difficulties. Problems affecting international trade remain.

For example, the United States has agreed in all of its income tax treaties with other countries not to use that method of corporate tax assessment known as worldwide unitary taxation. However, a few States persist in its usage, doubly taxing U.S. corporations and discriminating between certain U.S. corporations and their foreign counterparts, to the detriment of the U.S. companies.

In addition to the double taxation of the income of affiliates of U.S. corporations, the use of worldwide unitary taxation is a disincentive to investment in the United States, and has been a serious disruption to this country's foreign policy. As Secretary of State Shultz explained to the Governor of California in his letter of January 30, 1986:

> This risk of double taxation may distort investment decisions, thereby reducing the overall flow of investment into the United States. * * * Continued state taxation on a worldwide unitary basis will greatly impair the ability of the Federal Government to carry out its tax and investment policy in the international arena and to manage the sensitive issue of international double taxation. This worldwide unitary issue has seriously complicated our economic relations with many of our closest allies.

Previously, on November 8, 1985, President Reagan expressed support for legislation which would:

> 1. Effect a requirement that multinationals be taxed by states only on income derived from the territory of the United States ('the water's edge requirement') and;
> 2. Address the question of equitable taxation of foreign source dividends.

Legislation is pending before this Congress, H.R. 2940 in the House of Representatives and S. 1843 in the Senate, which would accomplish those goals. Though there was not an opportunity to consider this legislation during our deliberations on the trade bill, I certainly hope that we will soon take the time to address this longstanding problem and seek the much needed solution.

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that trade legislation is timely and important. Current laws need to be toughened. The President needs a clearer and stronger authority to lead the United States successfully through a new round of multilateral trade negotiations. This trade bill, however, will not accomplish these goals.

In fact, it does just the opposite. This bill would erode the President's authority on trade issues. This bill provides the U.S. Trade Representative [USTR] with too much independent power. The USTR, not the President, will have final authority to determine if a U.S. industry is hurt by foreign trade laws and how the United States should retaliate.

This bill tips the balance between protectionism and free trade in favor of protectionism. It favors protectionism in the administrative process, and will increase the likelihood of retaliatory actions by other nations which can only harm U.S. workers and U.S. exporters.

This legislation establishes new, looser criteria to be used in determining if an industry is injured by imports, including the loss of market share regardless of the cause. Then, if protection is granted, the President is prohibited from modifying the action for 2 years even if there is an improvement in domestic market share or if a trade war erupts. In other words, the President, who is responsible for the national interest, is unable to act in the national interest.

This bill is strikingly incongruous when juxtaposed with recent developments. American exports are surging now at an all time high level. They contributed almost half of the GNP growth America experienced last quarter. The trade deficit has dramatically declined. Unemployment is down to 5.3 percent, the lowest rate since the early 1970's. More people are working now than ever before.

In addition, the international community is moving toward greater trade liberalization. The United States is in the process of concluding a free trade agreement with Canada and a beef and citrus accord with Japan. The European Economic Community is moving toward removal of all internal barriers to trade by 1992. Last month, Australia and New Zealand enacted a free trade agreement. At a time when the rest of the world is liberalizing trade, we should not now be enacting legislation that will strengthen protectionism.

Without question, our large and persistent trade deficit is a serious problem. Experts agree that trade legislation can have only a small effect on the balance of payments. We all know that major reductions in the Federal budget deficit is the only way to achieve major reductions in our trade deficits. Trade legislation such as we have before us is but a testimony to our unwillingness to address the real problem.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I am speaking in support of H.R. 4848 and urge its approval. This is a good, comprehensive trade bill that offers the United States the chance to regain the footing it lost in the world economy over the last several years. And since the whole is only as good as the sum of its parts, I would like to discuss one part of this trade bill that I feel is particularly good. Section 1941, repeal of the windfall profit tax.

This tax has a most peculiar history, but one that is in keeping with the conventional Democratic mentality. This mentality says that if it moves, regulate it, and if it profits, tax it. In the Carter years, the Democrats did exactly that to the oil industry, first regulating it with the price controls, then taxing it with the windfall profit tax.

President Carter pushed hard for the tax in 1980. With the decontrol of domestic oil prices, he felt the oil industry would stand to benefit from enormous "windfalls" and "profits" because oil prices were so high at the time and were expected to go higher. Of course, I have to point out here that the name "windfall profits tax" is really a misnomer since the tax has absolutely nothing to do with actual profits.

As we all know, though, the price of oil fell through the floor. The convoluted structure of this tax says that when the price of a barrel of oil falls below a certain point, the tax is removed. We have been below that point for quite some time. Consequently, the windfall profit tax is a misnomer because there are no "windfall profits" to tax, which means no revenue can be collected.

Yet the tax is still a financial burden because of compliance costs and senseless paperwork associated with the tax. Some have estimated that compliance costs alone are $100 million per year. In addition, according to the U.S. Treasury, the Federal Government spends about $15 million per year in administering the tax and processing paperwork. This means that the United States spends $115 million per year taxing "windfall profits" that do not even exist! This is comparable to an inverse Houdini, wherein the United States has miraculously gotten itself inside of a sealed trunk without even undoing the locks.

In addition to the costs still associated with the tax, there are two other real consequences. First, this tax effectively reduces the competitiveness of the U.S. oil industry relative to the rest of the world, thus contributing to the trade deficit. Specifically, while our oil industry remains mired under this tax, our economic competitors have adjusted for the fall in oil prices. In 1986, Canada repealed its version of the windfall profit tax, the petroleum gas revenue tax. The United Kingdom did likewise. The United States, however, has decided to forgo the benefits such investment would bring, much to the delight of our economic competitors since we unwittingly choose to import their oil.

Second, and more importantly, this tax only facilitates the decline in U.S. oil production and ultimately compromises our energy security. It does not take a Ph.D. in economics to realize this fact. If I am an oil producer considering investing in either a new or old oil reserve, this tax will affect my decision because, even if the world price of oil does increase, my rate of return will still not be enough to offset the risk of investing in the first place. So, I pack up my equipment and go abroad. Meanwhile, the United States has fewer and fewer oil producers and less and less oil reserves. The Department of Energy estimates that repeal of the windfall profit tax could recover up to 75,000 barrels of oil per day. That's good for the trade deficit and for our economic security.

Why should we choose to compromise our economic security with an obsolete tax such as this? Why should the oil industry be suffocated with this useless excise tax when it already contributes a great deal to the coffers? There is an old adage that says, "The art of taxation consists in so plucking the goose as to obtain the largest amount of feathers with the least amount of hissing."

Well, in this case, the goose is not just hissing—it's squawking, and rightfully so! This excise tax, conceived by the Democrats, has plucked the feathers from an industry that is extremely vital to our economic security. If this tax ever had a purpose, which I seriously doubt, then it has been served. By approving the trade bill in its current form, we can, among other things, repeal this tax and head in the direction of recovering the economic security we relinquished because of the tax.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, today I rise in support of H.R. 4848 and particularly in support of title VIII, the Small Business International Trade and Competitiveness Act. At this time, I would like to confine my remarks to the small business title, our title is the product of extensive hearings, arduous examination and debate of the issues and diligent effort to achieve a consensus measure. I would like to commend the gentleman from New York, Chairman JOHN LAFALCE, subcommittee chairman, IKE SKELTON, subcommittee ranking minority member, ANDY IRELAND, members of the subcommittee and full committee and their outstanding staffs for their fine efforts which are now reflected in this title.

The inclusion of a small business trade title in such a monumental and comprehensive measure as the one before us today is without precedent in the history of this body. Indeed, this marks a legislative milestone and achievement in the history of the Committee on Small Business, and the members of our committee should feel a sense of pride and accomplishment because of this. As the ranking minority member, I am proud of the work our committee has done the opportunity we have been given, Yet, if we look beyond our pride of accomplishment and the celebration of the moment, we seek this achievement not as our own but for what it truly is and whom it truly belongs. Through our title, this body has given further recognition to the growing importance of the most vital sector of America's economy today: small business. Our title also defines a new role for small business: participation in international trade in the context of a changing global economy. America and small business are marching together toward a bright new future full of the promise of greater rewards of prosperity, economic growth and personal development through challenge and competition. I have said it before, but it bears repeating now: Small business is America's partner in growth.

Expert testimony given before our committee revealed that an estimated 40,000 small concerns nationwide are now capable of engaging in overseas trade and possess the potential for becoming major exporters of U.S. goods and services. That is an important number and not because it represents such a small fraction of the total number of small businesses nationwide. It is significant because it points to a world of possibilities—and opportunities—that exist for small businesses and can be nurtured with the proper care and feeding. And that is what we have attempted to do in our title: To awaken small firms to their potential as exporters and to provide the means necessary to assist and prepare them to enter the world of international trade.

I would urge my colleagues to support the small business title and the bill that contains it.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, as our President likes to say, "There you go again!" It must seem to the President that the House of Representatives is stuck in a hopeless cycle. Well, we may have to do the same thing over and over again; but, Mr. President, it is not hopeless. We are going to pass legislation that will effectively deal with the trade problem despite the administration's opposition. Several months ago we passed an excellent trade bill. The legislation we are now considering is obviously inferior. It is indeed sad that the ban on export of Alaskan oil and the plant-closing provision had to be eliminated to gain the administration's backing. The two provisions the President specifically singled out as most unacceptable were among the most attractive provisions in the bill. We have dropped those provisions to gain the administration's support. By doing so we are sacrificing our energy security and delaying enactment of an important protection for American workers.

While it is unfortunate the President chose to veto our earlier effort, it is clear that the bill currently before the House will do much to eliminate unfair trade practices that harm our economy.

We are in a unique era of unfair trade. Unlike past periods when dominant trading nations unfairly imposed their wills on their trading partners, the 1980's have seen the world's foremost trading nation relinquish its economic power. Our Nation, in particular, has sacrificed fair trade at the altar of diplomacy.

H.R. 4848 is an effort to change this and assure that the Federal Government vigorously protects U.S. trading and economic interests.

However, during most of the debate over trade matters, there has been very little discussion of how American exports and imports travel; that is, about ocean shipping. Though many Americans know that the vast majority of our imports and exports are transported over water, few appreciate that—as a result of unfair trade practices—foreign operators are carrying most of those goods.

U.S.-flag operators currently carry a negligible portion of our trade. All told, less than 5 percent of our ocean-borne trade is transported on U.S. vessels. Our merchant fleet now consists of 460 privately owned ships, and only 376 are in active service. The Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense has presented to the President a series of reports graphically outlining the sad state of our maritime industry. Among the Commission's most frightening conclusions are that the shipyard base cannot meet our defense needs and that we have neither the ships nor the trained seafarers to support even a limited conventional war.

The general public doesn't worry too much about how their Japanese cars get here or what flag the vessels in port are flying. Unlike the steel, automobile, and textile industries, Americans are too far removed from shipping services to recognize that this important industry is disappearing. There doesn't seem to be widespread understanding that our merchant marine is indispensable to peacetime commerce and national defense.

Those of us who are troubled about the declining U.S. presence on the oceans of the world welcome this opportunity to address some of the major problems that keep American ship operators out of foreign markets. During numerous days of hearings, the Merchant Marine Subcommittee heard about literally hundreds of devices that place our U.S.-flag operators at a competitive disadvantage vis-a-vis their foreign competition. Other nations are not hesitant to use every tool imaginable to help their shipbuilders and operators. The maritime trade provisions in this bill provide that, when these unfair devices are used to help our competition, the Federal Maritime Commission shall investigate the situation and take appropriate action. This title will put some teeth in our laws—it will provide an administrative means to eliminate foreign practices that block U.S. ships from gaining access to foreign cargoes.

Through this legislation, we have the opportunity to tell the world community that we will insist on fair treatment for ships flying the American flag. H.R. 4848, standing alone, will not solve the problems of the American merchant marine any more than it will solve all our trade problems, but it is an important start that will assure our citizens of a fair opportunity to compete in international trade. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4848, the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988.

In 1986, faced with a record-setting trade deficit of $156 billion, we first began the debate on the bill which has evolved into H.R. 4848. We passed that original bill, H.R. 4800, by more than a two-thirds margin, but it was not taken up in the Senate.

In 1987, our trade deficit topped out at even higher $171.2 billion. In response, we passed H.R. 3 by a wide margin. That bill has probably involved more Members and committees of the House and Senate than any other bill in history. It was overwhelmingly passed in the Senate, but squashed by the President with a veto.

Today, we have another chance to pass the most comprehensive trade bill in almost 15 years, and it's about time. If Congress and the President fail to enact this bill into law, we surely will be beaten in the world trade war.

For years, our trading partners have been carving up larger and larger slices of the American market, and we have supplied them with the knife.

The time has come for us to look more closely at just how they are miraculously able to offer American consumers the low prices which we all demand.

By dumping imports in our market at less than fair market value; by offering Government subsidies for product development, manufacture, and shipment; by using child labor, and by severely limiting American exports of goods and services, our so-called trading partners have acquired significant shares of the American market, while limiting our access to theirs.

H.R. 4848 provides us with new ammunition. The bill strengthens our ability to retaliate against unfairly traded foreign imports; it provides almost $1 billion for worker training; it improves our schools and libraries; it makes it easier for American companies to export their products; and it extends the President's authority to negotiate trade agreements.

These and the bill's other provisions will undoubtedly help us chip away at our overwhelming trade deficit, but the list of the bill's provisions is slimmer than it was when we started out.

The Bryant amendment requiring the collection of information about the foreign governments and businesses which have bought $1.5 trillion of our national debt, stocks, bonds, and real estate was dropped.

The Gephardt amendment requiring the President to retaliate against unfair foreign trade practices was dropped.

The plant-closings provision to give workers 60 days of notice before they lost their jobs was dropped.

All of these provisions are vitally important, but in the process of wooing the President and the business community, they were dropped.

The new version of the bill is supported by the National Association of Manufacturers, the chamber of commerce, the Emergency Council on American Trade, and a host of other business groups. They were all opposed to the provisions which were deleted, but they all want to reduce the trade deficit—so they all support the new bill.

Although important and controversial sections were unfortunately stripped from the omnibus trade bill, the present package stands on its own merit. I'm convinced that it will help increase our trading competitiveness and turn around our trade deficit. For more than 2 years, we have all worked long and hard hammering out the details of this bill, I urge every Member of the House to vote for its passage.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (H.R. 4848).

America is facing a trade crisis. The U.S. merchandise trade account has shown a record deficit for the past 5 years. Imports have doubled since 1980. The 1987 trade deficit of $171.2 billion was the largest annual imbalance ever.

Our lack of a clear and concise policy has resulted in a reversal of our position in the world. The United States is now the world's largest debtor nation. Instead of supplying capital to the rest of the world, we are borrowing savings from other nations at an unprecedented rate. This dependence on foreign borrowing could leave the U.S. economy subject to the whims of foreign investors.

It is time to put our fiscal house in order. The Nation needs H.R. 4848, which reflects a comprehensive and fair trade policy. This bill reforms U.S. trade laws, provides new remedies against countries which pursue unfair trade policies, removes unreasonable restrictions on U.S. high-technology exports, and provides for the retraining of American workers who suffer trade-related unemployment.

H.R. 4848 requires the President to retaliate against violations of trade agreements and other unjustifiable trade practices. It also seeks to expand the definition of unfair trade practices to include export targeting—defined as concerted government plans to increase the export competitiveness of certain industries—denial of worker rights and foreign cartels.

The bill strengthens and expands the Trade Adjustment Assistance [TAA] Program and increases its emphasis on training. The bill makes training an entitlement; any worker who meets specified criteria would be entitled to repayment for qualified training program costs. In addition, the measure expands the TAA Program to oil and gas workers and to all secondary workers—those employed in providing goods and services to the industries directly affected by imports. H.R. 4848 authorizes $980 million a year for the next 2 years for a new Worker Readjustment Program to provide comprehensive assistance to dislocated workers—workers who have lost their jobs to plant shutdowns or layoffs.

The bill requires the Treasury Department to enter into discussions with other countries on establishing a special debt management facility to serve as an intermediary between private banks and indebted Third World governments.

These are just a few of the many important provisions in the trade bill. H.R. 4848 represents a comprehensive, broad-based solution to our vast and complicated trade and competitiveness problems. I urge my colleagues to support the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the motion to recommit the trade bill, H.R. 4848, in order to strike the Caribbean ethanol provision. Whatever one thinks about the overall merits of the trade bill, this extraneous provision is misplaced and should be removed.

This loophole undermines the purpose of the Caribbean Basin Initiative, which gives Caribbean countries easier access to U.S. markets to help the Caribbean economy. And it is a blow to our domestic ethanol industry by allowing subsidized alcohol to enter our country duty free.

The language now in the bill will have the effect of allowing a few distillation facilities operating in the Caribbean to expand their practice of laundering subsidized wine from Europe into the United States duty free. The Europeans are dumping their wine surplus into the Caribbean, where the water is extracted and the wine transformed into ethanol. The extraction process is very simple and adds little to the Caribbean economy.

These distillation facilities are currently importing about 45 million gallons of ethanol into our country this year and have the potential to increase this amount to 250 million if this loophole stays in the trade bill. The damage to our domestic ethanol industry and our farmers will be substantial. In my State of Minnesota, for example, domestic ethanol costs about 98 cents a gallon to produce. This subsidized wine alcohol is estimated to cost no more than 70 cents in the Minnesota market.

I do not have a problem with legitimate Caribbean producers who make alcohol with indigenous feedstock, but I do object to people who just pass alcohol through the Caribbean to take advantage of our special trading arrangement with the region. It is patently unfair to penalize the American farmer in order to provide a convenient and lucrative dumping ground for a surplus European commodity. The ethanol language should be removed from the trade bill.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4848, the equitable trade bill or fair trade bill. The need for this bill is apparent to most. We have moved from the status of creditor nation to debtor nation. We have abused some and bent over backwards for others. We need to move from free trade to fair trade. We need to be concerned with the economic stability of our country and our citizens. For too long we have imported products and exported jobs. I am not so naive as to believe that passing a fair trade bill will solve all our economic problems but it is a start to salvaging our basic industries while building toward the ability to compete in the high technology world of tomorrow. The present law does not provide sufficient protection against the unfair trade practices of some of our trading partners. The bill before us would require the President to act expediently against those practices. The American people want it, expect it, and deserve it. It is up to us to stand and deliver it. I urge my colleagues to support the fair trade bill.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Chairman, it is with reluctance that I rise to oppose H.R. 4848, the omnibus trade bill. As a trade-expansionist, I had hoped to vote on a bill that would truly improve the competitiveness of U.S. industry. H.R. 4848 professes to do this, but when measured against reality, it fails and fails badly.

Instead of expanding foreign markets, H.R. 4848 will close them. Instead of lowering the price of U.S. exports, H.R. 4848 will make them more expensive for foreigners to buy. Instead of strengthening our negotiating posture, H.R. 4848 weakens it. H.R. 4848 serves not the national interest, but special interests, and I cannot in good conscience support it.

As I said when the conference report was previously considered by this body, H.R. 4848 more closely resembles an end-of-the-year continuing resolution, a "CR", than it does a coherent expression of trade policy. After all, what is a CR? It is a massive amalgam of special-interest favors, most of them unknown and undisciplined, quietly secured by the congressional leadership and tucked beneath a veneer of some admittedly worthy programs.

H.R. 4848 fits the same description. The sheer length of H.R. 4848—more than 1,000 pages—and its general lack of even an appearance of major policy initiatives testifies to the nature of the deed. This is not government at its best. This is "government by CR" all over again.

The architects of H.R. 4848 insist there really is meat in this bill. We're left wondering what kind. Is it steak? Certainly not. Hamburger? Not even that.

Typical of the supposedly tough provisions in H.R. 4848 are modifications to section 301 of the 1974 Trade Act. As it stands now, section 301, which is invoked to retaliate against closed foreign markets, is aimed at specific sectors of the economy. It's flexible, allowing our trade representatives to target their efforts at a specific trade-related dispute. It enables our negotiators to isolate foreign trade barriers and, if all else fails, to carefully orchestrate countervailing measures to pry those barriers open.

Instead of making it easier for our trade representatives to negotiate, the "Super 301" provision in H.R. 4848 makes it harder. The trade bill destroys much of the flexibility in section 301 by challenging a country's entire trading practices instead of focusing on specific industries. Instead of letting our negotiators devise a trade-opening strategy in a specific sector, super 301 forces them to wage a full-scale retaliation against an entire country. This is the Gephardt amendment all over again. Now, as then, it is not only unwise and totally unnecessary, but it needlessly invites a trade war.

Corrective surgery is performed with a scalpel, not a butcher knife. Super 301 apparently extends the doctrine of mutually assured destruction to trade policy, with us launching the first salvo in response to even the most isolated regional conflict.

Section 301 also dilutes out bargaining power by shifting authority for action from the President to the U.S. Trade Representative. Presumably, it would be easier for Congress to browbeat him with our parochial concerns than it would be the President.

There's an old saying that there are two things you don't want to see made: sausage and laws. Maybe that explains the true meat in H.R. 4848. Like sausage, H.R. 4848 comes in carefully packaged and tightly wrapped. Slickest of all is the title—the Trade and Competitiveness Act—and the page after page of sense-of-the-Congress exhortations saying that trade should be expanded, markets should be opened, and so forth. The kindest thing that can be said about any of this is it is false advertising. At least sausage tastes good.

Even most of the sweetners in this bill have little to do with trade. Repeal of the windfall profit tax on oil is an example of this.

Like many Members from the Southwest, I am keenly aware of the damage this tax has wrought on any industry reeling from oversupply. Having some knowledge of therir suffering, I cannot believe the callousness and irresponsibility of isolating windfall profits tax repeal—which is, let me stress again, clearly a nontrade issue—and welding it to H.R. 4848 in order to ensure the passage of an otherwise unpalatable package. Make no mistake: Congress is engaging in political gamesmanship at the public's expense. The ransom is not worth the price.

One of the few sound trade-related elements of this alleged trade bill is that it enacts the so-called harmonized code, unifying much of the world's trading systems. According to H.R. 4848 supporters, we are supposed to rejoice that the harmonized code is finally going to become law after months of delay. I strongly support the harmonized code. But the fact that it has been held hostage to the passage of H.R. 4848 is outrageous. Congress should have adopted the harmonized code prior to January 1, along with the rest of the industrialized world. I cosponsored legislation, offered by the distinguished chairman of the Trade Subcommittee, Mr. GIBBONS, that would have implemented the harmonized code on time. Incredibly, H.R. 4848 prevented that bill from being considered when it should have been.

For these reasons and many others, I urge my colleagues to defeat H.R. 4848. This bill should be opposed not just on principle, but on substance. The American people don't need a trade placebo. They need trade expansion, this year and every year hence.

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Chairman, as a supporter of H.R. 4848, I am pleased that we are again discussing the state of American competitiveness. Frankly, however, I am disappointed that we have not been able to move beyond this modest legislation. I am also frustrated that we have not yet agreed that the U.S. Congress should act decisively to assure a fair world market place for American products.

While some have talked of a "Morning in America," many of my constituents have been left in the dark. In the last 5 years, the steel industry has suffered financial losses of $12 billion and lost 56 percent of its labor force. As the largest steel producing region in the Nation, the communities of northwest Indiana have been especially hard hit. Many people in Gary, Hammond, and East Chicago, IN, believe—with considerable justification—that it is late afternoon in America and we had better take decisive action before the sun goes down.

H.R. 4848, the trade bill which we consider today, would establish fairer trading opportunities for numerous American industries, including steel. The steel provisions in the bill include a measure to eliminate a loophole in the Voluntary Restraint Agreement [VRA] Program, and a measure to curb the diversionary dumping of foreign steel on American shores.

I am pleased that this legislation takes major steps in recognizing our dislocated workers as a tremendous national asset, not a national burden.

Finally, I would like to add a brief footnote regarding H.R. 2527, the plant closing notification bill. From a historical context, I find it interesting to reflect upon the President's determination to deny American workers some knowledge of their own destiny. The same forces which would deny workers the 60-day notification sought to keep young children toiling in sweatshops. We have progressed beyond those times, but we still have a considerable distance to go.

I urge my colleagues to cast a vote for the continued march toward economic justice and competitiveness. Please support H.R. 4848, the trade bill and H.R. 2527, the plant closing notification bill.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for H.R. 4848, the Omnibus Trade Act, which, minus the plant closing notification provision and certain restrictions on Alaskan oil exports, is identical to the trade bill approved by the Congress earlier this year and vetoed by President Reagan. It is imperative that this important legislation be enacted into law this year so that we can begin to get this country's massive trade deficit under control. I believe that the steps mandated in the bill to strengthen laws that protect against unfair foreign trade practices and that press the executive branch to take action against these unfair practices will vastly improve current law and go a long way toward reducing the trade deficit. While recognizing the myriad important provisions contained in this legislation, I would like to focus today on a few that I know are of special importance to my home State of West Virginia.

H.R. 4848 strengthens and expands the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program which has been of such critical assistance to the unemployed in West Virginia. Significantly, it extends program eligibility to secondary workers or firms that supply essential goods and services to firms directly affected by imports. In other words, those coal miners who worked for mines not owned by a steel plant shut down by imports, but which supplied that plant with coal, would now be eligible for benefits. Current law allows only those workers directly employed by an affected company to receive TAA benefits. This provision would become effective only if an import fee is put in place for financing. The bill requires the President to negotiate with our trading partners for agreement on the imposition of a small uniform fee on all U.S. imports which would be used for a trust fund to support the program.

Additionally, the bill makes the training portion of the TAA Program an entitlement: any worker who meets specified criteria would be entitled to payment of training program costs. The total annual cap on payments for training costs would be $80 million.

H.R. 4848 authorizes $980 million for fiscal year 1989 for a new worker readjustment program that would provide comprehensive services to dislocated workers who have lost their jobs due to plant closings, layoffs or other major disruptions. This new program would replace the existing dislocated worker program under title III of the Job Training Partnership Act. The program would be run principally at the State level, with States receiving 80 percent of the funds allocated on the basis of the current title III formula—one-third on the basis of unemployment, one-third on the basis of unemployment in excess of 4.5 percent, and one-third on the basis of long-term unemployment. Under the bill, each State must designate a State office that would respond rapidly to permanent plant closings and substantial layoffs throughout the State. These offices would be expected to contact employees and unions within a short time of a closure or layoff.

To close, Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation as a much needed revision of our Nation's antiquated and ineffective trade law. One only has to look at the huge trade deficit statistics, which indicate that the deficit is now over five times the level that existed in 1981, to realize how desperately we need this legislation.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, years of work on omnibus trade legislation are now nearing a successful conclusion. The Senate has already passed the plant closing legislation. Earlier today the House passed that legislation by an overwhelming margin and we are about to do the same with the revised omnibus trade bill, H.R. 4848. Soon I would expect that the Senate will take final action on the trade bill, and the President will sign it into law.

The process of crafting a sound bipartisan trade bill has been a difficult one, and the administration's resistance to important policy initiatives has made it all the more so. It was 3 years ago that the House began seriously working on trade legislation. But at that time the administration was not interested in trade legislation, despite our rapidly rising trade deficit, mounting debt, and the declining competitiveness of U.S. industries, high tech as well as smokestack.

While the administration remained indifferent, our competitive position continued to deteriorate and plants continued to close across this country. Over a year ago, the House again passed an omnibus trade bill, substantially similar in its basic thrust to the one we have before us today. A Senate bill with some important differences passed shortly thereafter, and House and Senate conferees then spent months trying to craft a bipartisan proposal that would generate broad support.

The conference committee did its work well, and the Congress made numerous concessions in an effort to garner administration approval. Nevertheless, after the conference report passed the House and Senate earlier this year by wide margins with broad bipartisan support, the President vetoed the bill.

While the President attempted to justify his decision by citing an array of "troublesome" provisions—including initiatives of my own that would require the administration to consider innovative solutions to the Third World debt crisis and create a competitiveness council in an effort to develop badly-needed industrial competitiveness strategies—there was clearly only one reason for the President's decision: the provision requiring 60-day notification of plant closings.

In my view, that provision provides only a minimum standard of decency for American workers. There was and is no justification for the administration's opposition.

While the House was able to override the President's veto by an overwhelming margin, the Senate failed to do the same, leaving us with neither plant closing legislation nor a trade bill. After years of effort and in the face of continuing competitive problems, we could not afford to lose the opportunity to pass vital trade legislation. As a result, the trade legislation we have before us today does not include the plant closing provision. But plant closing legislation will nevertheless remain a vital part of this country's trade initiative. If the administration again vetoes it, I believe both House and Senate will override.

I would like to think that will not be necessary. The administration has at long last admitted the need for trade legislation. I can only hope that the President will now reconsider his position on plant closing legislation. The issue is one of fundamental fairness—it will not and should not go away.

Even assuming passage of the trade bill and plant closing legislation, our job is not finished. These initiatives, however important, are only first steps. While we have seen some improvement in our trade figures in recent months the broader and truer measure of our competitive position—the current account deficit—continues to rise. Moreover, sustained deficits at current levels remain intolerable and reflect the continuing deterioration of American industry.

We remain heavily import dependent, as we are increasingly unable to produce or develop the sophisticated products and processes needed to fuel our own growth. There has long been an anomaly in the statistics that measure the health of our manufacturing sector. According to our Commerce Department, as the trade deficit has widened and imports have surged, industrial production has somehow maintained its historic share of total U.S. output. But new evidence suggests that the real manufacturing share in GNP is in fact declining and the Government's methodology has consistently overstated the stability of manufacturing output.

The deindustrialization of America is no myth. There is overwhelming evidence that one domestic industry after another is losing markets here at home and not making it up abroad. Key industries are disappearing. Having made some progress, we cannot now retreat to a cocoon mentality that denies the fundamental structural problems we continue to face.

An honest look beyond our trade figures shows that the cloud over our competitive future remains. We will continue to need more imaginative trade and sectoral policies. The trade bill is a critical first step, but we must not stop here.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4848, the omnibus trade bill, passed by Congress and vetoed by the President last month. I voted in favor of the bill then and I vote in favor of the bill today. It is virtually the same bill passed originally in April by the House and voted to override the veto in May, with the exception of the plant closing provisions passed this very day. This bill is very important and makes a comprehensive restructuring of our trade policy.

The bill affects almost every aspect of the current trade laws, including authorizing the President to enforce U.S. rights against foreign violations of trade agreements and to attempt to eliminate unfair trade practices of foreign governments. The bill also authorizes the President to provide assistance and relief to industries suffering from unfair foreign competition.

This legislation is good for U.S. competition and is good for American workers. It provides assistance to workers affected by unfair trade policies. The bill expands the Trade Adjustment Act [TAA] programs to assist in the special adjustment problems for workers who supply essential goods and services to firms directly affected by increased import competition. The TAA Program was originally established to assist workers and firms directly affected by foreign competition.

The bill also authorizes approximately $735 million for 14 different programs for worker education and training to increase American competition. This includes $30 million for worksite literacy programs, $25 million for English family literacy grants and $20 million for foreign language assistance. It also provides $250 million for secondary school programs and $110 million for higher education programs.

It also expands the role of the National Institute of Standards and Technology to work with small- and medium-sized companies in developing and utilizing advanced technology and directs the Department of Commerce to advance the research and development of advanced semiconductor manufacturing technology.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important measure because it makes this country more competitive in the international arena. It is good for every community in this country, every worker in this country. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this bill. It is high time to enact this bill into law to give our businesses and workers the advantage they need to stay competitive in the international arena.

Miss SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4848, a bill to enhance the competitiveness of American industry. The competitiveness of American industry is an important concern for both the United States and Rhode Island. Between 1980 and 1985, the U.S. trade deficit grew from $36 billion to $149 billion. For every $1 billion increase in the trade deficit, the United States lost between 21,000 and 25,000 jobs.

The manufacturing sector in Rhode Island, led by jewelry, electrical machinery, industrial instruments, fabricated metals, and textiles, accounts for 28 percent of all State employment. This sector exported over $500 million in manufactured products in 1983, generating approximately 12,000 jobs or 10.4 percent of the State's total manufacturing employment. This legislation can help to protect these vital industries.

A part of this bill that I believe will be especially useful is one that I authored as a member of the Science, Space, and Technology Committee. This provision would establish a clearinghouse on State and local competitiveness initiatives.

This clearinghouse would be a central repository for information on initiatives taken by State and local governments to improve U.S. competitiveness. Its main responsibilities would be to collect information on State and local initiatives; advise State and locals about such initiatives, especially regarding Federal assistance which is available; and study ways in which Federal agencies, especially labs, could expand their assistance to State and locals. A report will also be required every 3 years to evaluate the status of State and local efforts and to make further recommendations.

I mention the inclusion of the clearinghouse in this bill as an example of one of the many sensible provisions that this bill includes to strengthen U.S. industrial competitiveness. Careful thought and considerable legislative effort has gone into the crafting of this legislation. Because of the magnitude of the international challenge that our domestic industries face, I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4848, the omnibus trade bill.

I would like to ask my colleagues to think back to 1 year ago, when the new battle cry was "let's make America competitive again." This trade bill was one of the responses to that challenge.

Unfortunately, the media has decided to focus on items like the Gephardt amendment, Presidential discretion in unfair trade cases, Japan-bashing, et cetera. So, it is easy to understand how most people are not aware of several provisions in this trade bill that will actually make the rhetoric of the past year a reality. I am referring to the provisions which streamline the U.S. export license system, provisions that will give one segment of American industry—the high-technology industry—the ability to flex its competitive muscles.

For many years, Congressmen DON BONKER, BILL FRENZEL, myself, and several others have been warning how our cumbersome and overly stringent export control system was putting our high-technology industry at a disadvantage with their international competitors. In February 1987, a distinguished panel of the National Academy of Sciences confirmed our fears, finding that the U.S. export license system was costing America's high-technology industry an estimated $9.2 billion in lost sales and 188,000 jobs each year.

With the Academy's report providing ammunition to our struggle to eliminate unnecessary export controls, Congressman FRENZEL and I introduced legislation proposing a number of reforms that were eventually incorporated into the House bill and the final conference report.

Let me give you one example of the dramatic reforms made by this bill.

Almost 40 percent of all U.S. high-technology products are shipped to so-called Cocom countries, that is, our NATO allies plus Japan minus Iceland. But statistics show that over 99 percent of those licenses are eventually approved anyway. This bill puts into place a mechanism that eventually will result in the creation of a "license free zone" among Cocom.

The AuCoin-Frenzel bill proposed that U.S. exporters be allowed to immediately ship their product to these countries without a license. The only requirement would be that they would have to provide notice to the U.S. Government that the product had been shipped. Our bill exempted super-computers from such license free treatment and it also gave the administration the ability to re-impose license requirements if it determined that one of these countries were engaging in a practice and pattern of noncompliance with Cocom rules.

The legislation before us today adopts the thrust of our proposal with a few minor changes. Although it does not immediately establish a license-free zone, it does immediately eliminate licenses on products up to what is known as the PRC Green Line. The practical effect of this provision would be to eliminate approximately 25,000 licenses per year. The bill then requires the President to designate within 3 months countries that have sufficient export control systems and qualify them for license-free treatment.

Just think of what this one provision could mean to our high-technology community. If a potential customer in one of those countries calls up to order a computer, our company no longer will have to hedge by saying "we have to apply for a license first." Instead, they can say "the computer's in the mail."

This is how we make America competitive again.

There are other reforms that will benefit our electronics industry. The bill eliminates re-export controls on products shipped within NATO countries and Japan. It makes it easier for a U.S. company to ship a product overseas if that product is already available from a foreign competitor. It authorizes the President to appoint a representative from U.S. industry to act as an adviser to our Cocom negotiating team. And it authorizes the establishment of several west coast export assistance centers.

In summary, the bill gives the green light to America's high-technology industry to compete in the international marketplace.

That's not to say that this bill is perfect. It would have been an even better bill if it curtailed the Department of Defense's redundant role in reviewing licenses on products destined for certain Western nations. And that is an issue that I intend to raise in the next Congress. But, on the whole, these are truly pro-trade provisions and I commend my colleagues, Mr. BONKER and Mr. FASCELL, for their leadership in guiding these reforms through the House.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the omnibus trade bill which has been referred to as 1,115 pages of procedural mayhem.

The trade bill restricts the President's authority, broad discretion, and flexibility in trade matters which are essential to achieve a negotiated settlement of bilateral disputes. The bill transfers substantial authority from the President to the U.S. Trade Representative to negotiate with other countries concerning unfair trade practices. It also requires retaliation against unjustifiable foreign trade practices. The authority to address serious trade disputes with foreign countries should rest with the President who is primarily responsible for negotiating with foreign countries under the Constitution. Furthermore, the President is in a better position to assess U.S. interests as a whole, including foreign relations, national security, and economic considerations.

It is indeed ironic that instead of addressing one of the root causes of the current U.S. trade deficit, a national debt of over $2 trillion, the trade bill would increase Government spending and impose an additional burden on taxpayers of about $2.4 billion a year. It would increase Government bureaucracy by creating over 30 new agencies, offices, panels and commissions, including the Council on Competitiveness which carries a price tag of $5 million a year.

The current trade statistics clearly indicate that we do not need more government bureaucracy to improve our trade figures. We do not need to transfer authority from the President to the U.S. Trade Representative. Instead we should concentrate on reducing the national debt at home and opening up markets abroad.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to include in the RECORD an excellent editorial which recently appeared in the Wall Street Journal. This editorial clearly outlines the serious flaws in the trade bill we are considering today.

The editorial follows:

PRESIDENT YEUTTER

The Free World's leaders may have celebrated Ronald Reagan's economic leadership in Toronto, but in Washington the politicians are working to repudiate that leadership by resurrecting a symbol of U.S. decline—the trade bill. If the pols succeed, the world's leaders may not need to talk to Michael Dukakis or George Bush at next year's economic summit; the person they'll want to see is Clayton Yeutter's successor.

As the U.S. Trade Representative, Mr. Yeutter hasn't suffered the inconvenience of running for office. But under Congress's trade "reform," he'd nonetheless become the most important American decision maker on trade policy. The Trade Representative would suddenly have final authority to determine both if a U.S. industry is being hurt by foreign trade laws and how the U.S. should retaliate. What if the commander in chief objects in the name of the national interest? Well, a President could always fire the trade rep, though we can imagine the cry that would be raised about "violating the spirit of the Trade Act" by all the Congresspersons representing special interests.

Mr. Yeutter's new—and probably unconstitutional—powers are only one example of the trade bill's sabotage of presidential authority. Somehow the Washington political community has convinced itself that the trade bill is no longer protectionist, though that's like saying Vietnam was only a police action. No one may be declaring a "trade war," but under this bill there'd still be a body count.

Congress's weapon-of-choice is 1,115 pages of procedural mayhem. Hundreds of provisions would either restrict a President's discretion or tip the political system in favor of special interests. The bill mandates some 150 new "studies," each designed to create political momentum for protection: Our favorite would assess the damage to the national interest from an invasion of foreign roses. Can anyone imagine putting such a thing into a purportedly serious federal law? Minnesota Senator Rudy Boschwitz points out that the bill would create more than 30 new federal and state agencies, offices, panels or commissions; these will not be lobbies for free trade.

Congress has also seen fit to box-in the executive with more restrictive "Section 201" actions. The bill dictates new criteria the U.S. International Trade Commission must use in determining "injury" from imports, including something as simple as a decline in market share. Companies won't even have to prove illegal "dumping." And once trade protection is granted, the bill bars a president from modifying the action for two years. If market share rises or a trade war erupts in the meantime, tough luck for the national interest.

In sum, all of this would do for trade policy what Congress has already done to foreign and budget policy over the past 20 years: Strip authority from the President and replace it with a Babel of 535 competing claims. If you like U.S. foreign policy in Central America, you'll love what this bill does to trade policy. Strangely, this goes unacknowledged even by Treasury Secretary James Baker, who advises President Reagan to sign the bill even though he knows it will damage America's economic leadership.

Ronald Reagan no doubt enjoyed the praise and deference he received from his fellow leaders this week, the payoff for leading the West out of the stagflation of the 1970s. Mr. Reagan can earn similar respect if he shows the same commitment to the powers of his office. Even stripped of plant closings, a revived trade bill deserves a veto—as an attempt to blot Mr. Reagan's economic record and as a raid on the powers the Founders wisely vested with the presidency.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of our time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

TITLE I—TRADE, CUSTOMS, AND TARIFF LAWS

SEC. 1001. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) in the last 10 years there has arisen a new global economy in which trade, technological development, investment, and services form an integrated system; and in this system these activities affect each other and the health of the United States economy;

(2) the United States is confronted with a fundamental disequilibrium in its trade and current account balances and a rapid increase in its net external debt;

(3) such disequilibrium and increase are a result of numerous factors, including—

(A) disparities between the macroeconomic policies of the major trading nations,

(B) the large United States budget deficit,

(C) instabilities and structural defects in the world monetary system,

(D) the growth of debt throughout the developing world,

(E) structural defects in the world trading system and inadequate enforcement of trade agreement obligations,

(F) governmental distortions and barriers,

(G) serious shortcomings in United States trade policy, and

(H) inadequate growth in the productivity and competitiveness of United States firms and industries relative to their overseas competition;

(4) it is essential, and should be the highest priority of the United States Government, to pursue a broad array of domestic and international policies—

(A) to prevent future declines in the United States economy and standards of living,

(B) to ensure future stability in external trade of the United States, and

(C) to guarantee the continued vitality of the technological, industrial, and agricultural base of the United States;

(5) the President should be authorized and encouraged to negotiate trade agreements and related investment, financial, intellectual property, and services agreements that meet the standards set forth in this title; and

(6) while the United States is not in a position to dictate economic policy to the rest of the world, the United States is in a position to lead the world and it is in the national interest for the United States to do so.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this title are to—

(1) authorize the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements;

(2) strengthen United States trade laws;

(3) improve the development and management of United States trade strategy; and

(4) through these actions, improve standards of living in the world.

Subtitle A—United States Trade Agreements

PART 1—NEGOTIATION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS

SEC. 1101. OVERALL AND PRINCIPAL TRADE NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

(a) OVERALL TRADE NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—The overall trade negotiating objectives of the United States are to obtain—

(1) more open, equitable, and reciprocal market access;

(2) the reduction or elimination of barriers and other trade-distorting policies and practices; and

(3) a more effective system of international trading disciplines and procedures.

(b) PRINCIPAL TRADE NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—

(1) DISPUTE SETTLEMENT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to dispute settlement are—

(A) to provide for more effective and expeditious dispute settlement mechanisms and procedures; and

(B) to ensure that such mechanisms within the GATT and GATT agreements provide for more effective and expeditious resolution of disputes and enable better enforcement of United States rights.

(2) IMPROVEMENT OF THE GATT AND MULTILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATION AGREEMENTS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding the improvement of GATT and multilateral trade negotiation agreements are—

(A) to enhance the status of the GATT;

(B) to improve the operation and extend the coverage of the GATT and such agreements and arrangements to products, sectors, and conditions of trade not adequately covered; and

(C) to expand country participation in particular agreements or arrangements, where appropriate.

(3) TRANSPARENCY.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding transparency is to obtain broader application of the principle of transparency and clarification of the costs and benefits of trade policy actions through the observance of open and equitable procedures in trade matters by Contracting Parties to the GATT.

(4) DEVELOPING COUNTRIES.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding developing countries are—

(A) to ensure that developing countries promote economic development by assuming the fullest possible measure of responsibility for achieving and maintaining an open international trading system by providing reciprocal benefits and assuming equivalent obligations with respect to their import and export practices; and

(B) to establish procedures for reducing nonreciprocal trade benefits for the more advanced developing countries.

(5) CURRENT ACCOUNT SURPLUSES.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding current account surpluses is to develop rules to address large and persistent global current account imbalances of countries, including imbalances which threaten the stability of the international trading system, by imposing greater responsibility on such countries to undertake policy changes aimed at restoring current account equilibrium, including expedited implementation of trade agreements where feasible and appropriate.

(6) TRADE AND MONETARY COORDINATION.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding trade and monetary coordination is to develop mechanisms to assure greater coordination, consistency, and cooperation between international trade and monetary systems and institutions.

(7) AGRICULTURE.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to agriculture are to achieve, on an expedited basis to the maximum extent feasible, more open and fair conditions of trade in agricultural commodities by—

(A) developing, strengthening, and clarifying rules for agricultural trade, including disciplines on restrictive or trade-distorting import and export practices;

(B) increasing United States agricultural exports by eliminating barriers to trade (including transparent and nontransparent barriers) and reducing or eliminating the subsidization of agricultural production consistent with the United States policy of agricultural stabilization in cyclical and unpredictable markets;

(C) creating a free and more open world agricultural trading system by resolving questions pertaining to export and other trade-distorting subsidies, market pricing and market access and eliminating and reducing substantially other specific constraints to fair trade and more open market access, such as tariffs, quotas, and other nontariff practices, including unjustified phytosanitary and sanitary restrictions; and

(D) seeking agreements by which the major agricultural exporting nations agree to pursue policies to reduce excessive production of agricultural commodities during periods of oversupply, with due regard for the fact that the United States already undertakes such policies, and without recourse to arbitrary schemes to divide market shares among major exporting countries.

(8) UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to unfair trade practices are—

(A) to improve the provisions of the GATT and nontariff measure agreements in order to define, deter, discourage the persistent use of, and otherwise discipline unfair trade practices having adverse trade effects, including forms of subsidy and dumping and other practices not adequately covered such as resource input subsidies, diversionary dumping, dumped or subsidized inputs, and export targeting practices;

(B) to obtain the application of similar rules to the treatment of primary and nonprimary products in the Agreement on Interpretation and Application of Articles VI, XVI, and XXIII of the GATT (relating to subsidies and countervailing measures); and

(C) to obtain the enforcement of GATT rules against—

(i) state trading enterprises, and

(ii) the acts, practices, or policies of any foreign government which, as a practical matter, unreasonably require that—

(I) substantial direct investment in the foreign country be made,

(II) intellectual property be licensed to the foreign country or to any firm of the foreign country, or

(III) other collateral concessions be made, as a condition for the importation of any product or service of the United States into the foreign country or as a condition for carrying on business in the foreign country.

(9) TRADE IN SERVICES.—

(A) The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding trade in services are—

(i) to reduce or to eliminate barriers to, or other distortions of, international trade in services, including barriers that deny national treatment and restrictions on establishment and operation in such markets; and

(ii) to develop internationally agreed rules, including dispute settlement procedures, which—

(I) are consistent with the commercial policies of the United States, and

(II) will reduce or eliminate such barriers or distortions, and help ensure fair, equitable opportunities for foreign markets.

(B) In pursuing the negotiating objectives described in subparagraph (A), United States negotiators shall take into account legitimate United States domestic objectives including, but not limited to, the protection of legitimate health or safety, essential security, environmental, consumer or employment opportunity interests and the law and regulations related thereto.

(10) INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding intellectual property are—

(A) to seek the enactment and effective enforcement by foreign countries of laws which—

(i) recognize and adequately protect intellectual property, including copyrights, patents, trademarks, semiconductor chip layout designs, and trade secrets, and

(ii) provide protection against unfair competition,

(B) to establish in the GATT obligations—

(i) to implement adequate substantive standards based on—

(I) the standards in existing international agreements that provide adequate protection, and

(II) the standards in national laws if international agreement standards are inadequate or do not exist,

(ii) to establish effective procedures to enforce, both internally and at the border, the standards implemented under clause (i), and

(iii) to implement effective dispute settlement procedures that improve on existing GATT procedures;

(C) to recognize that the inclusion in the GATT of—

(i) adequate and effective substantive norms and standards for the protection and enforcement of intellectual property rights, and

(ii) dispute settlement provisions and enforcement procedures, is without prejudice to other complementary initiatives undertaken in other international organizations; and

(D) to supplement and strengthen standards for protection and enforcement in existing international intellectual property conventions administered by other international organizations, including their expansion to cover new and emerging technologies and elimination of discrimination or unreasonable exceptions or preconditions to protection.

(11) FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT.—

(A) The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding foreign direct investment are—

(i) to reduce or to eliminate artificial or trade-distorting barriers to foreign direct investment, to expand the principle of national treatment, and to reduce unreasonable barriers to establishment; and

(ii) to develop internationally agreed rules, including dispute settlement procedures, which—

(I) will help ensure a free flow of foreign direct investment, and

(II) will reduce or eliminate the trade distortive effects of certain trade-related investment measures.

(B) In pursuing the negotiating objectives described in subparagraph (A), United States negotiators shall take into account legitimate United States domestic objectives including, but not limited to, the protection of legitimate health or safety, essential security, environmental, consumer or employment opportunity interests and the law and regulations related thereto.

(12) SAFEGUARDS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding safeguards are—

(A) to improve and expand rules and procedures covering safeguard measures;

(B) to ensure that safeguard measures are—

(i) transparent,

(ii) temporary,

(iii) degressive, and

(iv) subject to review and termination when no longer necessary to remedy injury and to facilitate adjustment; and

(C) to require notification of, and to monitor the use by, GATT Contracting Parties of import relief actions for their domestic industries.

(13) SPECIFIC BARRIERS.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States regarding specific barriers is to obtain competitive opportunities for United States exports in foreign markets substantially equivalent to the competitive opportunities afforded foreign exports to United States markets, including the reduction or elimination of specific tariff and nontariff trade barriers, particularly—

(A) measures identified in the annual report prepared under section 181 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2241); and

(B) foreign tariffs and nontariff barriers on competitive United States exports when like or similar products enter the United States at low rates of duty or are duty-free, and other tariff disparities that impede access to particular export markets.

(14) WORKER RIGHTS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding worker rights are—

(A) to promote respect for worker rights;

(B) to secure a review of the relationship of worker rights to GATT articles, objectives, and related instruments with a view to ensuring that the benefits of the trading system are available to all workers; and

(C) to adopt, as a principle of the GATT, that the denial of worker rights should not be a means for a country or its industries to gain competitive advantage in international trade.

(15) ACCESS TO HIGH TECHNOLOGY.—

SEC. 1102. TRADE AGREEMENT NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY.

(a) AGREEMENTS REGARDING TARIFF BARRIERS.—

(1) Whenever the President determines that one or more existing duties or other import restrictions of any foreign country or the United States are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and that the purposes, policies, and objectives of this title will be promoted thereby, the President—

(A) before June 1, 1993, may enter into trade agreements with foreign countries; and

(B) may, subject to paragraphs (2) through (5), proclaim—

(i) such modification or continuance of any existing duty,

(B) increases any rate of duty above the rate that applies on such date of enactment.

(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the aggregate reduction in the rate of duty on any article which is in effect on any day pursuant to a trade agreement entered into under paragraph (1) shall not exceed the aggregate reduction which would have been in effect on such day if a reduction of 3 percent ad valorem or a reduction of one-tenth of the total reduction, whichever is greater, had taken effect on the effective date of the first reduction proclaimed in paragraph (1) to carry out such agreement with respect to such article.

(B) No staging under subparagraph (A) is required with respect to a rate reduction that is proclaimed under paragraph (1) for an article of a kind that is not produced in the United States. The United States International Trade Commission shall advise the President of the identity of articles that may be exempted from staging under this subparagraph.

(4) If the President determines that such action will simplify the computation of reductions under paragraph (3), the President may round an annual reduction by the lesser of—

(A) the difference between the reduction without regard to this paragraph and the next lower whole number; or

(B) one-half of 1 percent ad valorem.

(5) No reduction in a rate of duty under a trade agreement entered into under subsection (a) on any article may take effect more than 10 years after the effective date of the first reduction under paragraph (1) that is proclaimed to carry out the trade agreement with respect to such article.

(6) A rate of duty reduction or increase that may not be proclaimed by reason of paragraph (2) may take effect only if a provision authorizing such reduction or increase is included within an implementing bill provided for under section 1103 and that bill is enacted into law.

(b) AGREEMENTS REGARDING NONTARIFF BARRIERS.—

(1) Whenever the President determines that any barrier to, or other distortion of, international trade—

(B) the imposition of any such barrier or distortion is likely to result in such a burden, restriction, or effect; and that the purposes, policies, and objectives of this title will be promoted thereby, the President may, before June 1, 1993, enter into a trade agreement with foreign countries providing for—

(i) the reduction or elimination of such barrier or other distortion; or

A trade agreement entered into under this paragraph may also provide for the reduction or elimination of barriers to, or other distortions of, the international trade of the foreign country or the United States.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no trade benefit shall be extended to any country by reason of the extension of any trade benefit to another country under a trade agreement entered into under paragraph (1) with such other country.

(3) A trade agreement may be entered into under paragraph (1) with any foreign country only if—

(A) the agreement makes progress in meeting the applicable objectives described in section 1101;

(4) The 60-day period of time described in paragraph (3)(B) shall be computed in accordance with section 1103(f).

(5) In any case in which there is an inconsistency between any provision of this Act and any bilateral free trade area agreement that entered into force and effect with respect to the United States before January 1, 1987, the provision shall not apply with respect to the foreign country that is party to that agreement.

"CHAPTER 1—ENFORCEMENT OF UNITED STATES RIGHTS UNDER TRADE AGREEMENTS AND RESPONSE TO CERTAIN FOREIGN TRADE PRACTICES

"SEC. 301. ACTIONS BY UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE.

"(a) Mandatory Action.—

"(1) If the United States Trade Representative determines under section 304(a)(1) that—

"(A) the rights of the United States under any trade agreement are being denied; or

"(B) an act, policy, or practice of a foreign country—

"(i) violates, or is inconsistent with, the provisions of, or otherwise denies benefits to the United States under, any trade agreement, or

"(ii) is unjustifiable and burdens or restricts United States commerce;

the Trade Representative shall take action authorized in subsection (c), subject to the specific direction, if any, of the President regarding any such action, and shall take all other appropriate and feasible action within the power of the President that the President may direct the Trade Representative to take under this subsection, to enforce such rights or to obtain the elimination of such act, policy, or practice.

"(2) The Trade Representative is not required to take action under paragraph (1) in any case in which—

"(A) the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade have determined, a panel of experts has reported to the Contracting Parties, or a ruling issued under the formal dispute settlement proceeding provided under any other trade agreement finds, that—

"(II) agreed to an imminent solution to the burden or restriction on United States commerce that is satisfactory to the Trade Representative,

"(iii) it is impossible for the foreign country to achieve the results described in clause (i) or (ii), as appropriate, but the foreign country agrees to provide to the United States compensatory trade benefits that are satisfactory to the Trade Representative,

"(iv) in extraordinary cases, where the taking of action under this subsection would have an adverse impact on the United States economy substantially out of proportion to the benefits of such action, taking into account the impact of not taking such action on the credibility of the provisions of this chapter, or

"(v) the taking of action under this subsection would cause serious harm to the national security of the United States.

"(3) Any action taken under paragraph (1) to eliminate an act, policy, or practice shall be devised so as to affect goods or services of the foreign country in an amount that is equivalent in value to the burden or restriction being imposed by that country on United States commerce.

"(b) Discretionary Action.—If the Trade Representative determines under section 304(a)(1) that—

"(1) an act, policy, or practice of a foreign country is unreasonable or discriminatory and burdens or restricts United States commerce, and

"(A) suspend, withdraw, or prevent the application of, benefits of trade agreement concessions to carry out a trade agreement with the foreign country referred to in such subsection;

"(B) impose duties or other import restrictions on the goods of, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, fees or restrictions on the services of, such foreign country for such time as the Trade Representative determines appropriate; or

"(C) enter into binding agreements with such foreign country that commit such foreign country to—

"(i) eliminate, or phase out, the act, policy, or practice that is the subject of the action to be taken under subsection (a) or (b),

"(ii) eliminate any burden or restriction on United States commerce resulting from such act, policy, or practice, or

"(iii) provide the United States with compensatory trade benefits that—

"(I) are satisfactory to the Trade Representative, and

"(II) meet the requirements of paragraph (4).

"(4) Any trade agreement described in paragraph (1)(C)(iii) shall provide compensatory trade benefits that benefit the economic sector which includes the domestic industry that would benefit from the elimination of the act, policy, or practice that is the subject of the action to be taken under subsection (a) or (b), or benefit the economic sector as closely related as possible to such economic sector, unless—

"(A) the provision of such trade benefits is not feasible, or

"(B) trade benefits that benefit any other economic sector would be more satisfactory than such trade benefits.

"(5) In taking actions under subsection (a) or (b), the Trade Representative shall—

"(A) give preference to the imposition of duties over the imposition of other import restrictions, and

"(B) if an import restriction other than a duty is imposed, consider substituting, on an incremental basis, an equivalent duty for such other import restriction.

"(II) such acts, policies, and practices are not inconsistent with the level of economic development of the foreign country.

"(2) The Trade Representative shall make the determinations required under paragraph (1) on or before—

"(A) in the case of an investigation involving a trade agreement (other than the agreement on subsidies and countervailing measures described in section 2(c)(5) of the Trade Agreements Act of 1979), the earlier of—

"(i) the date that is 30 days after the date on which the dispute settlement procedure is concluded, or

"(ii) the date that is 18 months after the date on which the investigation is initiated, or

"(B) in all cases not described in subparagraph (A) or paragraph (3), the date that is 12 months after the date on which the investigation is initiated.

"(3)(A) If an investigation is initiated under this chapter by reason of section 302(b)(2) and the Trade Representative does not make a determination described in subparagraph (B) with respect to such investigation, the Trade Representative shall make the determinations required under paragraph (1) with respect to such investigation by no later than the date that is 6 months after the date on which such investigation is initiated.

"(B) If the Trade Representative determines with respect to any investigation initiated by reason of section 302(b)(2) that—

"(ii) the foreign country involved in the investigation is making substantial progress in drafting or implementing legislative or administrative measures that will provide adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights, or

"(iii) such foreign country is undertaking enforcement measures to provide adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights, the Trade Representative shall publish in the Federal Register notice of such determination and shall make the determinations required under paragraph (1) with respect to such investigation by no later than the date that is 9 months after the date on which such investigation is initiated.

"(4) In any case in which a dispute is not resolved before the close of the minimum dispute settlement period provided for in a trade agreement (other than the agreement on subsidies and countervailing measures described in section 2(c)(5) of the Trade Agreements Act of 1979), the Trade Representative, within 15 days after the close of such dispute settlement period, shall submit a report to Congress setting forth the reasons why the dispute was not resolved within the minimum dispute settlement period, the status of the case at the close of the period, and the prospects for resolution. For purposes of this paragraph, the minimum dispute settlement period provided for under any such trade agreement is the total period of time that results if all stages of the formal dispute settlement procedures are carried out within the time limitations specified in the agreement, but computed without regard to any extension authorized under the agreement at any stage.

"(b) Consultation Before Determinations.—

"(1) Before making the determinations required under subsection (a)(1), the Trade Representative, unless expeditious action is required—

"(B) shall obtain advice from the appropriate committees established pursuant to section 135, and

"(C) may request the views of the United States International Trade Commission regarding the probable impact on the economy of the United States of the taking of action with respect to any goods or service.

"(2) If the Trade Representative does not comply with the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) because expeditious action is required, the Trade Representative shall, after making the determinations under subsection (a)(1), comply with such subparagraphs.

"(c) Publication.—The Trade Representative shall publish in the Federal Register any determination made under subsection (a)(1), together with a description of the facts on which such determination is based.

"SEC. 305. IMPLEMENTATION OF ACTIONS.

"(2)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the Trade Representative may delay, by not more than 180 days, the implementation of any action that is to be taken under section 301—

"(i) if—

"(I) in the case of an investigation initiated under section 302(a), the petitioner requests a delay, or

"(II) in the case of an investigation initiated under section 302(b)(1) or to which section 304(a)(3)(B) applies, a delay is requested by a majority of the representatives of the domestic industry that would benefit from the action, or

"(ii) if the Trade Representative determines that substantial progress is being made, or that a delay is necessary or desirable, to obtain United States rights or a satisfactory solution with respect to the acts, policies, or practices that are the subject of the action.

"(B) The Trade Representative may not delay under subparagraph (A) the implementation of any action that is to be taken under section 301 with respect to any investigation to which section 304(a)(3)(A) applies.

"(b) Alternative Actions in Certain Cases of Export Targeting.—

"(1) If the Trade Representative makes an affirmative determination under section 304(a)(1)(A) involving export targeting by a foreign country and determines to take no action under section 301 with respect to such affirmation determination, the Trade Representative—

"(A) shall establish an advisory panel to recommend measures which will promote the competitiveness of the domestic industry affected by the export targeting,

"(B) on the basis of the report of such panel submitted under paragraph (2)(B) and subject to the specific direction, if any, of the President, may take any administrative actions authorized under any other provision of law, and, if necessary, propose legislation to implement any other actions, that would restore or improve the international competitiveness of the domestic industry affected by the export targeting, and

"(C) shall, by no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the report of such panel is submitted under paragraph (2)(B), submit a report to the Congress on the administrative actions taken, and legislative proposals made, under subparagraph (B) with respect to the domestic industry affected by the export targeting.

"(2)(A) The advisory panels established under paragraph (1)(A) shall consist of individuals appointed by the Trade Representative who—

"(i) earn their livelihood in the private sector of the economy, including individuals who represent management and labor in the domestic industry affected by the export targeting that is the subject of the affirmative determination made under section 304(a)(1)(A), and

"(ii) by education or experience, are qualified to serve on the advisory panel.

"(B) By no later than the date that is 6 months after the date on which an advisory panel is established under paragraph (1)(A), the advisory panel shall submit to the Trade Representative and to the Congress a report on measures that the advisory panel recommends be taken by the United States to promote the competitiveness of the domestic industry affected by the export targeting that is the subject of the affirmative determination made under section 304(a)(1)(A).

"(a) In General.—The Trade Representative shall monitor the implementation of each measure undertaken, or agreement of a kind described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of section 301(a)(2)(B) that is entered into under subsection (a) or (b) of section 301, by a foreign country—

"(1) to enforce the rights of the United States under any trade agreement, or

"(2) to eliminate any act, policy, or practice described in subsection (a)(1)(B) or (b)(1) of section 301.

"(b) Further Action.—If, on the basis of the monitoring carried out under subsection (a), the Trade Representative considers that a foreign country is not satisfactorily implementing a measure or agreement referred to in subsection (a), the Trade Representative shall determine what further action the Trade Representative shall take under section 301(a). For purposes of section 301, any such determination shall be treated as a determination made under section 304(a)(1).

"(c) Consultations.—Before making any determination under subsection (b), the Trade Representative shall—

"(1) consult with the petitioner, if any, involved in the initial investigation under this chapter and with representatives of the domestic industry concerned; and

"(2) provide an opportunity for the presentation of views by interested persons.

"SEC. 307. MODIFICATION AND TERMINATION OF ACTIONS.

"(a) In General.—

"(1) The Trade Representative may modify or terminate any action, subject to the specific direction, if any, of the President with respect to such action, that is being taken under section 301 if—

"(A) any of the conditions described in section 301(a)(2) exist,

"(B) the burden or restriction on United States commerce of the denial rights, or of the acts, policies, and practices, that are the subject of such action has increased or decreased, or

"(C) such action is being taken under section 301(b) and is no longer appropriate.

"(2) Before taking any action under paragraph (1) to modify or terminate any action taken under section 301, the Trade Representative shall consult with the petitioner, if any, and with representatives of the domestic industry concerned, and shall provide opportunity for the presentation of views by other interested persons affected by the proposed modification or termination concerning the effects of the modification or termination and whether any modification or termination of the action is appropriate.

"(b) Notice; Report to Congress.—The Trade Representative shall promptly publish in the Federal Register notice of, and report in writing to the Congress with respect to, any modification or termination of any action taken under section 301 and the reasons therefor.

"(c) Review of Necessity.—

"(1) If—

"(A) a particular action has been taken under section 301 during any 4-year period, and

"(B) neither the petitioner nor any representative of the domestic industry which benefits from such action has submitted to the Trade Representative during the last 60 days of such 4-year period a written request for the continuation of such action, such action shall terminate at the close of such 4-year period.

"(2) The Trade Representative shall notify by mail the petitioner and representatives of the domestic industry described in paragraph (1)(B) of any termination of action by reason of paragraph (1) at least 60 days before the date of such termination.

"(3) If a request is submitted to the Trade Representative under paragraph (1)(B) to continue taking a particular action under section 301, the Trade Representative shall conduct a review of—

"(A) the effectiveness in achieving the objectives of section 301 of—

"(i) such action, and

"(ii) other actions that could be taken (including actions against other products or services), and

"(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), and notwithstanding any other provision of law (including section 552 of title 5, United States Code), no information requested and received by the Trade Representative in aid of any investigation under this chapter shall be made available to any person if—

"(A) the person providing such information certifies that—

"(i) such information is business confidential,

"(ii) the disclosure of such information would endanger trade secrets or profitability, and

"(iii) such information is not generally available;

"(B) the Trade Representative determines that such certification is well-founded; and

"(C) to the extent required in regulations prescribed by the Trade Representative, the person providing such information provides an adequate nonconfidential summary of such information.

"(2) The Trade Representative may—

"(A) use such information, or make such information available (in his own discretion) to any employee of the Federal Government for use, in any investigation under this chapter, or

"(B) may make such information available to any other person in a form which cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, the person providing the information.

"SEC. 309. ADMINISTRATION.

"The Trade Representative shall—

"(1) issue regulations concerning the filing of petitions and the conduct of investigations and hearings under this subchapter,

"(2) keep the petitioner regularly informed of all determinations and developments regarding the investigation conducted with respect to the petition under this chapter, including the reasons for any undue delays, and

"(3) submit a report to the House of Representatives and the Senate semiannually describing—

"(A) the petitions filed and the determinations made (and reasons therefor) under section 302,

"(B) developments in, and the current status of, each investigation or proceeding under this chapter,

"(C) the actions taken, or the reasons for no action, by the Trade Representative under section 301 with respect to investigations conducted under this chapter, and

"(D) the commercial effects of actions taken under section 301.".

(a) In General.—Chapter 1 of title III of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended by section 1301, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 310. IDENTIFICATION OF TRADE LIBERALIZATION PRIORITIES.

"(a) Identification.—

"(1) By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date in calendar year 1989, and also the date in calendar year 1990, on which the report required under section 181(b) is submitted to the appropriate Congressional committees, the Trade Representative shall identify United States trade liberalization priorities, including—

"(A) priority practices, including major barriers and trade distorting practices, the elimination of which are likely to have the most significant potential to increase United States exports, either directly or through the establishment of a beneficial precedent;

"(B) priority foreign countries that, on the basis of such report, satisfy the criteria in paragraph (2);

"(C) estimate the total amount by which United States exports of goods and services to each foreign country identified under subparagraph (B) would have increased during the preceding calendar year if the priority practices of such country identified under subparagraph (A) did not exist; and

"(D) submit to the Committee on Finance of the Senate, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and publish in the Federal Register, a report which lists—

"(i) the priority foreign countries identified under subparagraph (B),

"(ii) the priority practices identified under subparagraph (A) with respect to each of such priority foreign countries, and

"(iii) the amount estimated under subparagraph (C) with respect to each of such priority foreign countries.

"(2) In identifying priority foreign countries under paragraph (1)(B), the Trade Representative shall take into account—

"(A) the number and pervasiveness of the acts, policies, and practices described in section 181(a)(1)(A), and

"(B) the level of United States exports of goods and services that would be reasonably expected from full implementation of existing trade agreements to which that foreign country is a party, based on the international competitive position and export potential of such products and services.

"(3) In identifying priority practices under paragraph (1)(A), the Trade Representative shall take into account—

"(A) the international competitive position and export potential of United States products and services,

"(B) circumstances in which the sale of a small quantity of a product or service may be more significant than its value, and

"(C) the measurable medium-term and long-term implications of government procurement commitments to United States exporters.

"(b) Initiation of Investigations.—By no later than the date that is 21 days after the date on which a report is submitted to the appropriate Congressional committees under subsection (a)(1)(D), the Trade Representative shall initiate under section 302(b)(1) investigations under this chapter with respect to all of those priority practices identified in such report by reason of subsection (a)(1)(D) for each of the priority foreign countries. The Trade Representative may initiate investigations under section 302(b)(1) with respect to all other priority practices identified under subsection (a)(1)(A).

"(c) Agreements for the Elimination of Barriers.—

"(1) In the consultations with a priority foreign country identified under subsection (a)(1) that the Trade Representative is required to request under section 303(a) with respect to an investigation initiated by reason of subsection (b), the Trade Representative shall seek to negotiate an agreement which provides for—

"(A) the elimination of, or compensation for, the priority practices identified under subsection (a)(1)(A) by no later than the close of the 3-year period beginning on the date on which such investigation is initiated, and

"(B) the reduction of such practices over a 3-year period with the expectation that United States exports to the foreign country will, as a result, increase incrementally during each year within such 3-year period.

"(2) Any investigation initiated under this chapter by reason of subsection (b) shall be suspended if an agreement described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) is entered into with the foreign country before the date on which any action under section 301 with respect to such investigation may be required under section 305(a) to be implemented.

"(3) If an agreement described in paragraph (1) is entered into with a foreign country before the date on which any action under section 301 with respect to such investigation may be required under section 305(a) to be implemented and the Trade Representative determines that the foreign country is not in compliance with such agreement, the Trade Representative shall continue the investigation that was suspended by reason of such agreement as though such investigation had not been suspended.

"(d) Annual Reports.—

"(1) On the date on which the report the Trade Representative is required to submit under subsection (a)(1)(D) in calendar year 1990, and on the anniversary of such date in the succeeding calendar years, the Trade Representative shall submit a report which includes—

"(A) revised estimates of the total amount determined under subsection (a)(1)(C) for each priority foreign country that has been identified under subsection (a)(1)(B),

"(B) evidence that demonstrates, in the form of increased United States exports to each of such priority foreign countries during the previous calendar year—

"(i) in the case of a priority foreign country that has entered into an agreement described in subsection (c)(1), substantial progress during each year within the 3-year period described in subsection (c)(1)(A) toward the goal of eliminating the priority practices identified under subsection (a)(1)(A) by the close of such 3-year period, and

"(ii) in the case of a country which has not entered into (or has not complied with) an agreement described in subsection (c)(1), the elimination of such practices, and

"(C) to the extent that the evidence described in subparagraph (B) cannot be provided, any actions that have been taken by the Trade Representative under section 301 with respect to such priority practices of each of such foreign countries.

"(2) The Trade Representative may exclude from the requirements of paragraph (1) in any calendar year beginning after 1993 any foreign country that has been identified under subsection (a)(1)(A) if the evidence submitted under paragraph (1)(B) in the 2 previous reports demonstrated that all the priority practices identified under subsection (a)(1)(A) with respect to such foreign country have been eliminated.".

(b) Conforming Amendment.—The table of contents for the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 309 the following new item:

"Sec. 310. Identification of trade liberalization priorities.".

SEC. 1303. IDENTIFICATION OF COUNTRIES THAT DENY ADEQUATE AND EFFECTIVE PROTECTION OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS.

(a) Findings and Purpose.—

(1) The Congress finds that—

(A) international protection of intellectual property rights is vital to the international competitiveness of United States persons that rely on protection of intellectual property rights; and

(B) the absence of adequate and effective protection of United States intellectual property rights, and the denial of fair and equitable market access, seriously impede the ability of the United States persons that rely on protection of intellectual property rights to export and operate overseas, thereby harming the economic interests of the United States.

(2) The purpose of this section is to provide for the development of an overall strategy to ensure adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights and fair and equitable market access for United States persons that rely on protection of intellectual property rights.

(b) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 8 of title I of the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 182. IDENTIFICATION OF COUNTRIES THAT DENY ADEQUATE PROTECTION, OR MARKET ACCESS, FOR INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the annual report is submitted to Congressional committees under section 181(b), the United States Trade Representative (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'Trade Representative') shall identify—

"(1) those foreign countries that—

"(A) deny adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights, or

"(B) deny fair and equitable market access to United States persons that rely upon intellectual property protection, and

"(2) those foreign countries identified under paragraph (1) that are determined by the Trade Representative to be priority foreign countries.

"(b) SPECIAL RULES FOR IDENTIFICATIONS.—

"(1) In identifying priority foreign countries under subsection (a)(2), the Trade Representative shall only identify those foreign countries—

"(A) that have the most onerous or egregious acts, policies, or practices that—

"(i) deny adequate and effective intellectual property rights, or

"(ii) deny fair and equitable market access to United States persons that rely upon intellectual property protection,

"(B) whose acts, policies, or practices described in subparagraph (A) have the greatest adverse impact (actual or potential) on the relevant United States products, and

"(C) that are not—

"(i) entering into good faith negotiations, or

"(ii) making significant progress in bilateral or multilateral negotiations, to provide adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights.

"(2) In identifying priority foreign countries under subsection (a)(2), the Trade Representative shall—

"(A) consult with the Register of Copyrights, the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks, other appropriate officers of the Federal Government, and

"(B) take into account information from such sources as may be available to the Trade Representative and such information as may be submitted to the Trade Representative by interested persons, including information contained in reports submitted under section 181(b) and petitions submitted under section 302.

"(3) The Trade Representative may identify a foreign country under subsection (a)(1)(B) only if the Trade Representative finds that there is a factual basis for the denial of fair and equitable market access as a result of the violation of international law or agreement, or the existence of barriers, referred to in subsection (d)(3).

"(c) REVOCATIONS AND ADDITIONAL IDENTIFICATIONS.—

"(1) The Trade Representative may at any time—

"(A) revoke the identification of any foreign country as a priority foreign country under this section, or

"(B) identify any foreign country as a priority foreign country under this section,

if information available to the Trade Representative indicates that such action is appropriate.

"(2) The Trade Representative shall include in the semiannual report submitted to the Congress under section 309(3) a detailed explanation of the reasons for the revocation under paragraph (1) of the identification of any foreign country as a priority foreign country under this section.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'persons that rely upon intellectual property protection' means persons involved in—

"(A) the creation, production or licensing of works of authorship (within the meaning of sections 102 and 103 of title 17, United States Code) that are copyrighted, or

"(B) the manufacture of products that are patented or for which there are process patents.

"(2) A foreign country denies adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights if the foreign country denies adequate and effective means under the laws of the foreign country for persons who are not citizens or nationals of such foreign country to secure, exercise, and enforce rights relating to patents, process patents, registered trademarks, copyrights and mask works.

"(3) A foreign country denies fair and equitable market access if the foreign country effectively denies access to a market for a product protected by a copyright, patent, or process patent through the use of laws, procedures, practices, or regulations which—

"(A) violate provisions of international law or international agreements to which both the United States and the foreign country are parties, or

"(B) constitute discriminatory nontariff trade barriers.

"(e) PUBLICATION.—The Trade Representative shall publish in the Federal Register a list of foreign countries identified under subsection (a) and shall make such revisions to the list as may be required by reason of action under subsection (c).".

SEC. 1305. INVESTIGATION OF BARRIERS IN JAPAN TO CERTAIN UNITED STATES SERVICES.

The United States Trade Representative shall, within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, initiate an investigation under section 302 of the Trade Act of 1974 regarding those acts, policies, and practices of the Government of Japan, and of entities owned, financed, or otherwise controlled by the Government of Japan, that are barriers in Japan to the offering or performance by United States persons of architectural, engineering, construction, and consulting services in Japan.

SEC. 1306. TRADE AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH JAPAN.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the United States is at a critical juncture in bilateral relations with Japan;

(2) the balance of trade between the United States and Japan has deteriorated steadily from an already large United States deficit of $10,400,000,000 in 1980 to an unprecedented United States deficit of $57,700,000,000 in 1987, a magnitude that is simply untenable;

(3) approximately 90 percent of the increase in total trade between the United States and Japan since 1980 has been in Japanese exports to the United States;

(4) United States exports to Japan have not significantly benefited from appreciation of the yen;

(5) the United States deficit in the balance of trade in manufactured goods is growing: in 1987 Japan exported $82,500,000,000 of manufactured goods to the United States, while the United States exported $14,600,000,000 in manufactured goods;

(6) Japan accounts for 49 percent of the worldwide deficit of the United States in the balance of trade in manufactured goods, calculated on a customs basis;

(7) our trade and economic relations with Japan are complex and cannot be effectively resolved through narrow sector-by-sector negotiations;

(8) a major problem between the United States and Japan is the absence of a political will in Japan to import; and

(9) meaningful negotiations must take place at the highest level, at a special summit of political leaders from both countries.

(b) Sense of the Congress.—

(1) It is the sense of the Congress that the President should propose to the Japanese Prime Minister that a special summit be held between the leaders of the United States and Japan for the purpose of—

(A) addressing trade and economic issues, and

(B) establishing—

(i) an agreement that provides objectives for improvement in trade and economic relations, and

(ii) targets for achieving these objectives.

(2) The delegation of the United States to the summit meeting described in subsection (a) should include—

(A) Members of Congress from both political parties, and

(B) appropriate officers of the executive branch of the United States Government.

(3) The delegation of Japan to the summit meeting described in subsection (a) should include—

(A) representatives of all political parties in Japan, and

(B) appropriate officers of the Government of Japan.

SEC. 1307. SUPERCOMPUTER TRADE DISPUTE.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) United States manufacturers of supercomputers have encountered significant obstacles in selling supercomputers in Japan, particularly to government agencies and universities;

(2) Japanese government procurement policies and pricing practices have denied United States manufacturers access to the Japanese supercomputer market;

(3) it has been reported that officials of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry of Japan have told United States Government officials that Japanese government agencies and universities do not intend to purchase supercomputers from United States manufacturers, or take steps to improve access for United States manufacturers;

(4) the United States Government in August 1987 signed an agreement with the Government of Japan establishing procedures for the procurement of United States supercomputers by the Government of Japan;

(5) concern remains as to implementation of the procurement agreement by the Government of Japan;

(6) there have been allegations that Japanese manufacturers of supercomputers have been offering supercomputers at drastically discounted prices in the markets of the United States, Japan, and other countries;

(7) deep price discounting raises the concern that Japan's large-scale vertically integrated manufacturers of supercomputers have targeted the supercomputer industry with the objective of eventual domination of the global computer market; and

(8) the supercomputer industry plays a central role in the technological competitiveness and national security of the United States.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of the Congress that the United States Trade Representative and other appropriate officials of the United States Government should—

(1) give the highest priority to concluding and enforcing agreements with the Government of Japan which achieve improved market access for United States manufacturers of supercomputers and end any predatory pricing activities of Japanese companies in the United States, Japan, and other countries; and

(2) continue to monitor the efforts of United States manufacturers of supercomputers to gain access to the Japanese market, recognizing that the Government of Japan may continue to manipulate the government procurement process to maintain the market dominance of Japanese manufacturers.

PART 2—IMPROVEMENT IN THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE ANTIDUMPING AND COUNTERVAILING DUTY LAWS

SEC. 1311. REFERENCE TO TITLE VII OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930.

Unless otherwise provided, whenever in this part an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a subtitle, section, subsection, or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a subtitle, section, subsection, or other provision of title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1671 et seq.).

"(i) Any export subsidy described in Annex A to the Agreement (relating to illustrative list of export subsidies).

"(ii) The following domestic subsidies, if provided or required by government action to a specific enterprise or industry, or group of enterprises or industries, whether publicly or privately owned and whether paid or bestowed directly or indirectly on the manufacture, production, or export of any class or kind of merchandise:

"(I) The provision of capital, loans, or loan guarantees on terms inconsistent with commercial considerations.

"(II) The provision of goods or services at preferential rates.

"(III) The grant of funds or forgiveness of debt to cover operating losses sustained by a specific industry.

"(IV) The assumption of any costs or expenses of manufacture, production, or distribution.

"(B) Special rule.—In applying subparagraph (A), the administering authority, in each investigation, shall determine whether the bounty, grant, or subsidy in law or in fact is provided to a specific enterprise or industry, or group of enterprises or industries. Nominal general availability, under the terms of the law, regulation, program, or rule establishing a bounty, grant, or subsidy, of the benefits thereunder is not a basis for determining that the bounty, grant, or subsidy is not, or has not been, in fact provided to a specific enterprise or industry, or group thereof.".

In the case of an agricultural product processed from a raw agricultural product in which (1) the demand for the prior stage product is substantially dependent on the demand for the latter stage product, and (2) the processing operation adds only limited value to the raw commodity, subsidies found to be provided to either producers or processors of the product shall be deemed to be provided with respect to the manufacture, production, or exportation of the processed product.".

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 773 (19 U.S.C. 1677b) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) the merchandise under investigation is exported from a nonmarket economy country, and

"(B) the administering authority finds that available information does not permit the foreign market value of the merchandise to be determined under subsection (a), the administering authority shall determine the foreign market value of the merchandise on the basis of the value of the factors of production utilized in producing the merchandise and to which shall be added an amount for general expenses and profit plus the cost of containers, coverings, and other expenses, as required by subsection (e). Except as provided in paragraph (2), the valuation of the factors of production shall be based on the best available information regarding the values of such factors in a market economy country or countries considered to be appropriate by the administering authority.

"(2) EXCEPTION.—If the administering authority finds that the available information is inadequate for purposes of determining the foreign market value of merchandise under paragraph (1), the administering authority shall determine the foreign market value on the basis of the price at which merchandise that is—

"(A) at a level of economic development comparable to that of the nonmarket economy country, and

"(B) significant producers of comparable merchandise.".

(b) NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRY DEFINED.—Section 771 (19 U.S.C. 1677) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(18) NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'nonmarket economy country' means any foreign country that the administering authority determines does not operate on market principles of cost or pricing structures, so that sales of merchandise in such country do not reflect the fair value of the merchandise.

"(B) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.—In making determinations under subparagraph (A) the administering authority shall take into account—

"(i) the extent to which the currency of the foreign country is convertible into the currency of other countries;

"(ii) the extent to which wage rates in the foreign country are determined by free bargaining between labor and management,

"(iii) the extent to which joint ventures or other investments by firms of other foreign countries are permitted in the foreign country,

"(iv) the extent of government ownership or control of the means of production,

"(v) the extent of government control over the allocation of resources and over the price and output decisions of enterprises, and

"(vi) such other factors as the administering authority considers appropriate.

"(C) DETERMINATION IN EFFECT.—

"(i) Any determination that a foreign country is a nonmarket economy country shall remain in effect until revoked by the administering authority.

"(ii) The administering authority may make a determination under subparagraph (A) with respect to any foreign country at any time.

"(E) COLLECTION OF INFORMATION.—Upon request by the administering authority, the Commissioner of Customs shall provide the administering authority a copy of all public and proprietary information submitted to, or obtained by, the Commissioner of Customs that the administering authority considers relevant to proceedings involving merchandise from nonmarket economy countries. The administering authority shall protect proprietary information obtained under this section from public disclosure in accordance with section 777.".

(c) SUSPENSION OF NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRY INVESTIGATIONS.—Section 734 (19 U.S.C. 1673c) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l) SPECIAL RULE FOR NONMARKET ECONOMY COUNTRIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The administering authority may suspend an investigation under this subtitle upon acceptance of an agreement with a nonmarket economy country to restrict the volume of imports into the United States of the merchandise under investigation only if the administering authority determines that—

"(A) such agreement satisfies the requirements of subsection (d), and

"(B) will prevent the suppression or undercutting of price levels of domestic products by imports of the merchandise under investigation.

"(2) FAILURE OF AGREEMENTS.—If the administering authority determines that an agreement accepted under this subsection no longer prevents the suppression or undercutting of domestic prices of merchandise manufactured in the United States, the provisions of subsection (i) shall apply.".

(2) A petition submitted under paragraph (1) shall contain such detailed information as the Trade Representative may require in support of the allegations in the petition.

(c) APPLICATION FOR ANTIDUMPING ACTION ON BEHALF OF THE DOMESTIC INDUSTRY.—

(1) If the Trade Representative, on the basis of the information contained in a petition submitted under paragraph (1), determines that there is a reasonable basis for the allegations in the petition, the Trade Representative shall submit to the appropriate authority of the Agreement country where the alleged dumping is occurring an application pursuant to Article 12 of the Agreement which requests that appropriate antidumping action under the law of that country be taken, on behalf of the United States, with respect to imports into that country of the merchandise concerned.

(2) At the request of the Trade Representative, the appropriate officers of the Department of Commerce and the United States International Trade Commission shall assist the Trade Representative in preparing the application under paragraph (1).

(d) CONSULTATION AFTER SUBMISSION OF APPLICATION.—After submitting an application under subsection (c)(1), the Trade Representative shall seek consultations with the appropriate authority of the Agreement country regarding the request for antidumping action.

(e) ACTION UPON REFUSAL OF AGREEMENT COUNTRY TO ACT.—If the appropriate authority of an Agreement country refuses to undertake antidumping measures in response to a request made therefor by the Trade Representative under subsection (c), the Trade Representative shall promptly consult with the domestic industry on whether action under any other law of the United States is appropriate.

(4) by striking out "paragraph (2)" in paragraph (4) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)) and inserting "paragraphs (2) and (3)".

SEC. 1320. DOWNSTREAM PRODUCT MONITORING.

(a) In General.—Subtitle D (19 U.S.C. 1677 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SEC. 780. DOWNSTREAM PRODUCT MONITORING.

"(a) Petition Requesting Monitoring.—

"(1) In general.—A domestic producer of an article that is like a component part or a downstream product may petition the administering authority to designate a downstream product for monitoring under subsection (b). The petition shall specify—

"(A) the downstream product,

"(B) the component product incorporated into such downstream product, and

"(C) the reasons for suspecting that the imposition of antidumping or countervailing duties has resulted in a diversion of exports of the component part into increased production and exportation to the United States of such downstream product.

"(2) Determination regarding petition.—Within 14 days after receiving a petition submitted under paragraph (1), the administering authority shall determine—

"(A) whether there is a reasonable likelihood that imports into the United States of the downstream product will increase as an indirect result of any diversion with respect to the component part, and

"(B) whether—

"(i) the component part is already subject to monitoring to aid in the enforcement of a bilateral arrangement (within the meaning of section 804 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984),

"(ii) merchandise related to the component part and manufactured in the same foreign country in which the component part is manufactured has been the subject of a significant number of investigations suspended under section 704 or 734 or countervailing or antidumping duty orders issued under this title or section 303, or

"(iii) merchandise manufactured or exported by the manufacturer or exporter of the component part that is similar in description and use to the component part has been the subject of at least 2 investigations suspended under section 704 or 734 or countervailing or antidumping duty orders issued under this title or section 303.

"(3) Factors to take into account.—In making a determination under paragraph (2)(A), the administering authority may, if appropriate, take into account such factors as—

"(A) the value of the component part in relation to the value of the downstream product,

"(B) the extent to which the component part has been substantially transformed as a result of its incorporation into the downstream product, and

"(C) the relationship between the producers of component parts and producers of downstream products.

"(4) Publication of determination.—The administering authority shall publish in the Federal Register notice of each determination made under paragraph (2) and, if the determination made under paragraph (2)(A) and a determination made under any subparagraph of paragraph (2)(B) are affirmative, shall transmit a copy of such determinations and the petition to the Commission.

"(5) Determinations not subject to judicial review.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any determination made by the administering authority under paragraph (2) shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(b) Monitoring by the Commission.—

"(1) In general.—If the determination made under subsection (a)(2)(A) and a determination made under any clause of subsection (a)(2)(B) with respect to a petition are affirmative, the Commission shall immediately commence monitoring of trade in the downstream product that is the subject of the determination made under subsection (a)(2)(A). If the Commission finds that imports of a downstream product being monitored increased during any calendar quarter by 5 percent or more over the preceding quarter, the Commission shall analyze that increase in the context of overall economic conditions in the product sector.

"(2) Reports.—The Commission shall make quarterly reports to the administering authority regarding the monitoring and analyses conducted under paragraph (1). The Commission shall make the reports available to the public.

"(c) Action on Basis of Monitoring Reports.—The administering authority shall review the information in the reports submitted by the Commission under subsection (b)(2) and shall—

"(1) consider the information in determining whether to initiate an investigation under section 702(a), 732(a), or 303 regarding any downstream product, and

"(2) request the Commission to cease monitoring any downstream product if the information indicates that imports into the United States are not increasing and there is no reasonable likelihood of diversion with respect to component parts.

"(d) Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'component part' means any imported article that—

"(A) during the 5-year period ending on the date on which the petition is filed under subsection (a), has been subject to—

"(i) a countervailing or antidumping duty order issued under this title or section 303 that requires the deposit of estimated countervailing or antidumping duties imposed at a rate of at least 15 percent ad valorem, or

"(ii) an agreement entered into under section 704, 734, or 303 after a preliminary affirmative determination under section 703(b), 733(b)(1), or 303 was made by the administering authority which included a determination that the estimated net subsidy was at least 15 percent ad valorem or that the estimated average amount by which the foreign market value exceeded the United States price was at least 15 percent ad valorem, and

"(B) because of its inherent characteristics, is routinely used as a major part, component, assembly, subassembly, or material in a downstream product.

"(2) The term 'downstream product' means any manufactured article—

"(A) which is imported into the United States, and

"(B) into which is incorporated any component part.".

"SEC. 781. PREVENTION OF CIRCUMVENTION OF ANTIDUMPING AND COUNTERVAILING DUTY ORDERS.

"(a) Merchandise Completed or Assembled in the United States.—

"(1) In general.—If—

"(A) merchandise sold in the United States is of the same class or kind as any other merchandise that is the subject of—

"(i) an antidumping duty order issued under section 736,

"(ii) a finding issued under the Antidumping Act, 1921, or

"(iii) a countervailing duty order issued under section 706 or section 303,

"(B) such merchandise sold in the United States is completed or assembled in the United States from parts or components produced in the foreign country with respect to which such order or finding applies, and

"(C) the difference between the value of such merchandise sold in the United States and the value of the imported parts and components referred to in subparagraph (B) is small,

the administering authority, after taking into account any advice provided by the Commission under subsection (e), may include within the scope of such order or finding the imported parts or components referred to in subparagraph (B) that are used in the completion or assembly of the merchandise in the United States at any time such order or finding is in effect.

"(2) Factors to consider.—In determining whether to include parts or components in a countervailing or antidumping duty order or finding under paragraph (1), the administering authority shall take into account such factors as—

"(A) the pattern of trade,

"(B) whether the manufacturer or exporter of the parts or components is related to the person who assembles or completes the merchandise sold in the United States from the parts or components produced in the foreign country with respect to which the order or finding described in paragraph (1) applies, and

"(C) whether imports into the United States of the parts or components produced in such foreign country have increased after the issuance of such order or finding.

"(b) Merchandise Completed or Assembled in Other Foreign Countries.—

"(1) In general.—If—

"(A) merchandise imported into the United States is of the same class or kind as any merchandise produced in a foreign country that is the subject of—

"(ii) a finding issued under the Antidumping Act, 1921, or

"(iii) a countervailing duty order issued under section 706 or section 303,

"(B) before importation into the United States, such imported merchandise is completed or assembled in another foreign country from merchandise which—

"(i) is subject to such order or finding, or

"(ii) is produced in the foreign country with respect to which such order or finding applies,

"(C) the difference between the value of such imported merchandise and the value of the merchandise described in subparagraph (B) is small, and

"(D) the administering authority determines that action is appropriate under this paragraph to prevent evasion of such order or finding, the administering authority, after taking into account any advice provided by the Commission under subsection (e), may include such imported merchandise within the scope of such order or finding at any time such order or finding is in effect.

"(2) Factors to consider.—In determining whether to include merchandise assembled or completed in a foreign country in a countervailing or antidumping duty order or finding under paragraph (1), the administering authority shall take into account such factors as—

"(A) the pattern of trade,

"(B) whether the manufacturer or exporter of the merchandise described in paragraph (1)(B) is related to the person who uses the merchandise described in paragraph (1)(B) to assemble or complete in the foreign country the merchandise that is subsequently imported into the United States, and

"(C) whether imports into the foreign country of the merchandise described in paragraph (1)(B) have increased after the issuance of such order or finding.

"(c) Minor Alterations of Merchandise.—

"(1) In general.—The class or kind of merchandise subject to—

"(A) an investigation under this title,

"(B) an antidumping duty order issued under section 736,

"(C) a finding issued under the Antidumping Act, 1921, or

"(D) a countervailing duty order issued under section 706 or section 303, shall include articles altered in form or appearance in minor respects (including raw agricultural products that have undergone minor processing), whether or not included in the same tariff classification.

"(2) Exception.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to altered merchandise if the administering authority determines that it would be unnecessary to consider the altered merchandise within the scope of the investigation, order, or finding.

"(d) Later-Developed Merchandise.—

"(1) In general.—For purposes of determining whether merchandise developed after an investigation is initiated under this title or section 303 (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'later-developed merchandise') is within the scope of an outstanding antidumping or countervailing duty order issued under this title or section 303 as a result of such investigation, the administering authority shall consider whether—

"(A) the later-developed merchandise has the same general physical characteristics as the merchandise with respect to which the order was originally issued (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'earlier product'),

"(B) the expectations of the ultimate purchasers of the later-developed merchandise are the same as for the earlier product,

"(C) the ultimate use of the earlier product and the later-developed merchandise are the same,

"(D) the later-developed merchandise is sold through the same channels of trade as the earlier product, and

"(E) the later-developed merchandise is advertised and displayed in a manner similar to the earlier product.

The administering authority shall take into account any advice provided by the Commission under subsection (e) before making a determination under this subparagraph.

"(2) Exclusion from orders.—The administering authority may not exclude a later-developed merchandise from a countervailing or antidumping duty order merely because the merchandise—

"(A) is classified under a tariff classification other than that identified in the petition or the administering authority's prior notices during the proceeding, or

"(B) permits the purchaser to perform additional functions, unless such additional functions constitute the primary use of the merchandise and the cost of the additional functions constitute more than a significant proportion of the total cost of production of the merchandise.

"(e) Commission Advice.—

"(1) Notification to commission of proposed action.—Before making a determination—

"(A) under subsection (a) with respect to merchandise completed or assembled in the United States (other than minor completion or assembly),

"(B) under subsection (b) with respect to merchandise completed or assembled in other foreign countries, or

"(C) under subsection (d) with respect to any later-developed merchandise which incorporates a significant technological advance or significant alteration of an earlier product, with respect to an antidumping or countervailing duty order or finding as to which the Commission has made an affirmative injury determination, the administering authority shall notify the Commission of the proposed inclusion of such merchandise in such countervailing or antidumping order or finding. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a decision by the administering authority regarding whether any merchandise is within a category for which notice is required under this paragraph is not subject to judicial review.

"(2) Request for consultation.—After receiving notice under paragraph (1), the Commission may request consultations with the administering authority regarding the inclusion. Upon the request of the Commission, the administering authority shall consult with the Commission and any such consultation shall be completed within 15 days after the date of the request.

"(3) Commission advice.—If the Commission believes, after consultation under paragraph (2), that a significant injury issue is presented by the proposed inclusion, the Commission may provide written advice to the administering authority as to whether the inclusion would be inconsistent with the affirmative determination of the Commission on which the order or finding is based. If the Commission decides to provide such written advice, it shall promptly notify the administering authority of its intention to do so, and must provide such advice within 60 days after the date of notification under paragraph (1). For purposes of formulating its advice with respect to merchandise completed or assembled in the United States from parts or components produced in a foreign country, the Commission shall consider whether the inclusion of such parts or components taken as a whole would be inconsistent with its prior affirmative determination.".

(b) Conforming Amendment.—The table of contents for title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 780 the following:

"Sec. 781. Prevention of circumvention of antidumping and countervailing duty orders.".

"(2) The President may implement such procedures as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purpose of paragraph (1).

"(3) The United States Trade Representative may, in a manner consistent with the purpose of any so-called 'third country equity provision' of an arrangement entered into under the President's Steel Policy, take such actions as he deems necessary with respect to steel imports of any other country or countries so as to ensure the effectiveness of any portion of such arrangement.".

"(iv) provide reasons for the inclusions and exclusions specified under clauses (ii) and (iii), and

"(v) identify such merchandise in terms of the designations used in the Tariff Schedules of the United States.

"(3) Notice; hearings.—If the determinations under paragraph (2)(B) are affirmative, the Commission shall—

"(A) publish notice in the Federal Register that the petition has been received, and

"(B) provide opportunity for the presentation of views regarding the establishment of the requested product category, including a public hearing if requested by any interested person.

"(4) Determinations.—

"(A) In general.—By no later than the date that is 90 days after the date on which a petition is filed under paragraph (1), the Commission shall determine the scope of the product category into which the short life cycle merchandise that is the subject of the affirmative dumping determinations identified in such petition shall be classified for purposes of this section.

"(B) Modifications not requested by petition.—

"(i) In general.—The Commission may, on its own initiative, make a determination modifying the scope of any product category established under subparagraph (A) at any time.

"(ii) Notice and hearing.—Determinations may be made under clause (i) only after the Commission has—

"(I) published in the Federal Register notice of the proposed modification, and

"(II) provided interested parties an opportunity for a hearing, and a period for the submission of written comments, on the classification of merchandise into the product categories to be affected by such determination.

"(C) Basis of determinations.—In making determinations under subparagraph (A) or (B), the Commission shall ensure that each product category consists of similar short life cycle merchandise which is produced by similar processes under similar circumstances and has similar uses.

"(b) Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

"(i) by substituting '120 days' for '160 days' if manufacturers that are second offenders account for a significant proportion of the merchandise under investigation, and

"(B) Exceptions.—Merchandise imported by, or for the use of, the Department of Defense shall not be subject to the imposition of countervailing or antidumping duties under this title if—

(3) recommendations regarding how compliance can be improved.

The United States Trade Representative shall complete the review required under this subsection and submit a report thereon to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

PART 3—PROTECTION OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS

SEC. 1341. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) United States persons that rely on protection of intellectual property rights are among the most advanced and competitive in the world; and

(2) the existing protection under section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 against unfair trade practices is cumbersome and costly and has not provided United States owners of intellectual property rights with adequate protection against foreign companies violating such rights.

(b) Purpose.—The purpose of this part is to amend section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 to make it a more effective remedy for the protection of United States intellectual property rights.

SEC. 1342. PROTECTION UNDER THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930.

(a) In General.—Section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1337) is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended to read as follows:

"(ii) to prevent the establishment of such an industry; or

"(iii) to restrain or monopolize trade and commerce in the United States.

"(B) The importation into the United States, the sale for importation, or the sale within the United States after importation by the owner, importer, or consignee, of articles that—

"(i) infringe a valid and enforceable United States patent or a valid and enforceable United States copyright registered under title 17, United States Code; or

"(ii) are made, produced, processed, or mined under, or by means of, a process covered by the claims of a valid and enforceable United States patent.

"(C) The importation into the United States, the sale for importation, or the sale within the United States after importation by the owner, importer, or consignee, of articles that infringe a valid and enforceable United States trademark registered under the Trademark Act of 1946.

"(D) The importation into the United States, the sale for importation, or the sale within the United States after importation by the owner, importer, or consignee, of a semiconductor chip product in a manner that constitutes infringement of a mask work registered under chapter 9 of title 17, United States Code.

"(2) Subparagraphs (B), (C), and (D) of paragraph (1) apply only if an industry in the United States, relating to the articles protected by the patent, copyright, trademark, or mask work concerned, exists or is in the process of being established.

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (2), an industry in the United States shall be considered to exist if there is in the United States, with respect to the articles protected by the patent, copyright, trademark, or mask work concerned—

"(A) significant investment in plant and equipment;

"(B) significant employment of labor or capital; or

"(C) substantial investment in its exploitation, including engineering, research and development, or licensing.

"(4) For the purposes of this section, the phrase 'owner, importer, or consignee' includes any agent of the owner, importer, or consignee.".

(2) Subsection (c) is amended by inserting before the period in the first sentence the following: ", except that the Commission may, by issuing a consent order or on the basis of a settlement agreement, terminate any such investigation, in whole or in part, without making such a determination".

The Commission shall make a determination with regard to such petition by no later than the 90th day after the date on which the Commission's notice of investigation is published in the Federal Register. The Commission may extend the 90-day period for an additional 60 days in a case it designates as a more complicated case. The Commission shall publish in the Federal Register its reasons why it designated the case as being more complicated. The Commission may require the complainant to post a bond as a prerequisite to the issuance of an order under this subsection.

"(3) The Commission may grant preliminary relief under this subsection or subsection (f) to the same extent as preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders may be granted under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.".

(4) Subsection (f) is amended—

"(C) the person fails to respond to the complaint and notice or otherwise fails to appear to answer the complaint and notice;

"(D) the person fails to show good cause why the person should not be found in default; and

"(E) the complainant seeks relief limited solely to that person;

the Commission shall presume the facts alleged in the complaint to be true and shall, upon request, issue an exclusion from entry or a cease and desist order, or both, limited to that person unless, after considering the effect of such exclusion or order upon the public health and welfare, competitive conditions in the United States economy, the production of like or directly competitive articles in the United States, and United States consumers, the Commission finds that such exclusion or order should not be issued.

"(2) In addition to the authority of the Commission to issue a general exclusion from entry of articles when a respondent appears to contest an investigation concerning a violation of the provisions of this section, a general exclusion from entry of articles, regardless of the source or importer of the articles, may be issued if—

"(A) no person appears to contest an investigation concerning a violation of the provisions of this section, and

"(B) such a violation is established by substantial, reliable, and probative evidence.

"(h) The Commission may by rule prescribe sanctions for abuse of discovery and abuse of process to the extent authorized by Rule 11 and Rule 37 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

(6) Subsection (k) (as redesignated by paragraph (5)(B) of this section) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" before the first sentence; and

"(2) If any person who has previously been found by the Commission to be in violation of this section petitions the Commission for a determination that the petitioner is no longer in violation of this section or for a modification or rescission of an exclusion from entry or order under subsection (d), (e), (f), (g), or (i)—

"(A) the burden of proof in any proceeding before the Commission regarding such petition shall be on the petitioner; and

"(B) relief may be granted by the Commission with respect to such petition—

(8) Such section is further amended by adding at the end the following:

"(n)(1) Information submitted to the Commission or exchanged among the parties in connection with proceedings under this section which is properly designated as confidential pursuant to Commission rules may not be disclosed (except under a protective order issued under regulations of the Commission which authorizes limited disclosure of such information) to any person (other than a person described in paragraph (2)) without the consent of the person submitting it.

"(2) Notwithstanding the prohibition contained in paragraph (1), information referred to in that paragraph may be disclosed to—

"(A) an officer or employee of the Commission who is directly concerned with carrying out the investigation in connection with which the information is submitted,

"(B) an officer or employee of the United States Government who is directly involved in the review under subsection (h), or

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), the amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) The United States International Trade Commission is not required to apply the provision in section 337(e)(2) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (as amended by subsection (a)(3) of this section) relating to the posting of bonds until the earlier of—

(i) the 90th day after such date of enactment; or

(ii) the day on which the Commission issues interim regulations setting forth the procedures relating to such posting.

(2) Notwithstanding any provision of section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930, the United States International Trade Commission may extend, by not more than 90 days, the period within which the Commission is required to make a determination in an investigation conducted under such section 337 if—

PART 4—TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE

SEC. 1371. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Telecommunications Trade Act of 1988".

SEC. 1372. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) rapid growth in the world market for telecommunications products and services is likely to continue for several decades;

(2) the United States can improve prospects for—

(A) the growth of—

(i) United States exports of telecommunications products and services, and

(ii) export-related employment and consumer services in the United States, and

(B) the continuance of the technological leadership of the United States, by undertaking a program to achieve an open world market for trade in telecommunications products, services, and investment;

(3) most foreign markets for telecommunications products, services, and investment are characterized by extensive government intervention (including restrictive import practices and discriminatory procurement practices) which adversely affect United States exports of telecommunications products and services and United States investment in telecommunications;

(4) the open nature of the United States telecommunications market, accruing from the liberalization and restructuring of such market, has contributed, and will continue to contribute, to an increase in imports of telecommunications products and a growing imbalance in competitive opportunities for trade in telecommunications;

(5) unless this imbalance is corrected through the achievement of mutually advantageous market opportunities for trade in telecommunications products and services between the United States and foreign countries, the United States should avoid granting continued open access to the telecommunications products and services of such foreign countries in the United States market; and

(6) the unique business conditions in the worldwide market for telecommunications products and services caused by the combination of deregulation and divestiture in the United States, which represents a unilateral liberalization of United States trade with the rest of the world, and continuing government intervention in the domestic industries of many other countries create a need to make an exception in the case of telecommunications products and services that should not necessarily be a precedent for legislating specific sectoral priorities in combating the closed markets or unfair foreign trade practices of other countries.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this part are—

(1) to foster the economic and technological growth of, and employment in, the United States telecommunications industry;

(2) to secure a high quality telecommunications network for the benefit of the people of the United States;

(3) to develop an international consensus in favor of open trade and competition in telecommunications products and services;

(4) to ensure that countries which have made commitments to open telecommunications trade fully abide by those commitments; and

(5) to achieve a more open world trading system for telecommunications products and services through negotiation and provision of mutually advantageous market opportunities for United States telecommunications exporters and their subsidiaries in those markets in which barriers exist to free international trade.

SEC. 1373. DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 1374. INVESTIGATION OF FOREIGN TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE BARRIERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Trade Representative shall conduct an investigation to identify priority foreign countries. Such investigation shall be concluded by no later than the date that is 5 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) FACTORS TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—In identifying priority foreign countries under subsection (a), the Trade Representative shall take into account, among other relevant factors—

(1) the nature and significance of the acts, policies, and practices that deny mutually advantageous market opportunities to telecommunications products and services of United States firms;

(2) the economic benefits (actual and potential) accruing to foreign firms from open access to the United States market;

(3) the potential size of the market of a foreign country for telecommunications products and services of United States firms;

(4) the potential to increase United States exports of telecommunications products and services, either directly or through the establishment of a beneficial precedent; and

(5) measurable progress being made to eliminate the objectionable acts, policies, or practices.

(c) REVOCATIONS AND ADDITIONAL IDENTIFICATIONS.—

(1) The Trade Representative may at any time, after taking into account the factors described in subsection (b)—

(A) revoke the identification of any priority foreign country that was made under this section, or

(B) identify any foreign country as a priority foreign country under this section,

if information available to the Trade Representative indicates that such action is appropriate.

(2) The Trade Representative shall include in the semiannual report submitted to the Congress under section 309(3) of the Trade Act of 1974 a detailed explanation of the reasons for the revocation under paragraph (1) of this subsection of any identification of any foreign country as a priority foreign country.

(d) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the investigation conducted under subsection (a) is completed, the United States Trade Representative shall submit a report on the investigation to the President and to appropriate committees of the Congress.

SEC. 1375. NEGOTIATIONS IN RESPONSE TO INVESTIGATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon—

(1) the date that is 30 days after the date on which any foreign country is identified in the investigation conducted under section 1374(a) as a priority foreign country, and

(2) the date on which any foreign country is identified under section 1374(c)(1)(B) as a priority foreign country, the President shall enter into negotiations with such priority foreign country for the purpose of entering into a bilateral or multilateral trade agreement under part 1 of subtitle A which meets the specific negotiating objectives established by the President under subsection (b) for such priority foreign country.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIFIC NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES FOR EACH FOREIGN PRIORITY COUNTRY.—

(1) The President shall establish such relevant specific negotiating objectives on a country-by-country basis as are necessary to meet the general negotiating objectives of the United States under this section.

(2)(A) The President may refine or modify specific negotiating objectives for particular negotiations in order to respond to circumstances arising during the negotiating period, including—

(i) changed practices by the priority foreign country,

(ii) tangible substantive developments in multilateral negotiations,

(iii) changes in competitive positions, technological developments, or

(iv) other relevant factors.

(B) By no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the President makes any modifications or refinements to specific negotiating objectives under subparagraph (A), the President shall submit to appropriate committees of the Congress a statement describing such modifications or refinements and the reasons for such modifications or refinements.

(c) General Negotiating Objectives.—The general negotiating objectives of the United States under this section are—

(1) to obtain multilateral or bilateral agreements (or the modification of existing agreements) that provide mutually advantageous market opportunities for trade in telecommunications products and services between the United States and foreign countries;

(2) to correct the imbalances in market opportunities accruing from reductions in barriers to the access of telecommunications products and services of foreign firms to the United States market; and

(3) to facilitate the increase in United States exports of telecommunications products and services to a level of exports that reflects the competitiveness of the United States telecommunications industry.

(d) Specific Negotiating Objectives.—The specific negotiating objectives of the United States under this section regarding telecommunications products and services are to obtain—

(1) national treatment for telecommunications products and services that are provided by United States firms;

(2) most-favored-nation treatment for such products and services;

(3) nondiscriminatory procurement policies with respect to such products and services and the inclusion under the Agreement on Government Procurement of the procurement (by sale or lease by government-owned or controlled entities) of all telecommunications products and services;

(4) the reduction or elimination of customs duties on telecommunications products;

(5) the elimination of subsidies, violations of intellectual property rights, and other unfair trade practices that distort international trade in telecommunications products and services;

(6) the elimination of investment barriers that restrict the establishment of foreign-owned business entities which market such products and services;

(7) assurances that any requirement for the registration of telecommunications products, which are to be located on customer premises, for the purposes of—

(A) attachment to a telecommunications network in a foreign country, and

(B) the marketing of the products in a foreign country, be limited to the certification by the manufacturer that the products meet the standards established by the foreign country for preventing harm to the network or network personnel;

(8) transparency of, and open participation in, the standards-setting processes used in foreign countries with respect to telecommunications products;

(9) the ability to have telecommunications products, which are to be located on customer premises, approved and registered by type, and, if appropriate, the establishment of procedures between the United States and foreign countries for the mutual recognition of type approvals;

(10) access to the basic telecommunications network in foreign countries on reasonable and nondiscriminatory terms and conditions (including nondiscriminatory prices) for the provision of value-added services by United States suppliers;

(11) the nondiscriminatory procurement of telecommunications products and services by foreign entities that provide local exchange telecommunications services which are owned, controlled, or, if appropriate, regulated by foreign governments; and

(12) monitoring and effective dispute settlement mechanisms to facilitate compliance with matters referred to in the preceding paragraphs of this subsection.

SEC. 1376. ACTIONS TO BE TAKEN IF NO AGREEMENT OBTAINED.

(a) In General.—

(1) If the President is unable, before the close of the negotiating period, to enter into an agreement under subtitle A with any priority foreign country identified under section 1374 which achieves the general negotiating objectives described in section 1375(b) as defined by the specific objectives established by the President for that country, the President shall take whatever actions authorized under subsection (b) that are appropriate and most likely to achieve such general negotiating objectives.

(2) In taking actions under paragraph (1), the President shall first take those actions which most directly affect trade in telecommunications products and services with the priority foreign country referred to in paragraph (1), unless the President determines that actions against other economic sectors would be more effective in achieving the general negotiating objectives referred to in paragraph (1).

(b) Actions Authorized.—

(1) The President is authorized to take any of the following actions under subsection (a) with respect to any priority foreign country:

(A) termination, withdrawal, or suspension of any portion of any trade agreement entered into with such country under—

(i) the Trade Act of 1974,

(ii) section 201 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, or

(iii) section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, with respect to any duty or import restriction imposed by the United States on any telecommunications product;

(B) actions described in section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974;

(C) prohibition of purchases by the Federal Government of telecommunications products of such country;

(D) increases in domestic preferences under title III of the Act of March 3, 1933 (41 U.S.C. 10a, et seq.) for purchases by the Federal Government of telecommunications products of such country;

(E) suspension of any waiver of domestic preferences under title III of the Act of March 3, 1933 (41 U.S.C. 10a, et seq.) which may have been extended to such country pursuant to the Trade Agreements Act of 1979 with respect to telecommunications products or any other products;

(F) issuance of orders to appropriate officers and employees of the Federal Government to deny Federal funds or Federal credits for purchases of the telecommunications products of such country; and

(G) suspension, in whole or in part, of benefits accorded articles of such country under title V of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2461, et seq.).

(2) Notwithstanding section 125 of the Trade Act of 1974 and any other provision of law, if any portion of a trade agreement described in paragraph (1)(A) is terminated, withdrawn, or suspended under paragraph (1) with respect to any duty imposed by the United States on the products of a foreign country, the rate of such duty that shall apply to such products entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, after the date on which such termination, withdrawal, or suspension takes effect shall be a rate determined by the President.

(c) Negotiating Period.—

(1) For purposes of this section, the term "negotiating period" means—

(A) with respect to a priority foreign country identified in the investigation conducted under section 1374(a), the 18-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, and

(B) with respect to any foreign country identified as a priority foreign country after the conclusion of such investigation, the 1-year period beginning on the date on which such identification is made.

(2)(A) The negotiating period with respect to a priority foreign country may be extended for not more than two 1-year periods.

(B) By no later than the date that is 15 days after the date on which the President extends the negotiating period with respect to any priority foreign country, the President shall submit to appropriate committees of the Congress a report on the status of negotiations with such country that includes—

(i) a finding by the President that substantial progress is being made in negotiations with such country, and

(ii) a statement detailing the reasons why an extension of such negotiating period is necessary.

(d) Modification and Termination Authority.—The President may modify or terminate any action taken under subsection (a) if, after taking into consideration the factors described in section 1374(b), the President determines that changed circumstances warrant such modification or termination.

(e) Report.—The President shall promptly inform the appropriate committees of the Congress of any action taken under subsection (a) or of the modification or termination of any such action under subsection (d).

SEC. 1377. REVIEW OF TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BY TRADE REPRESENTATIVE.

(a) In General.—

(1) In conducting the annual analysis under section 181(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2241), the Trade Representative shall review the operation and effectiveness of—

(A) each trade agreement negotiated by reason of this part that is in force with respect to the United States; and

(B) every other trade agreement regarding telecommunications products or services that is in force with respect to the United States.

(2) In each review conducted under paragraph (1), the Trade Representative shall determine whether any act, policy, or practice of the foreign country that has entered into the agreement described in paragraph (1)—

(A) is not in compliance with the terms of such agreement, or

(B) otherwise denies, within the context of the terms of such agreement, to telecommunications products and services of United States firms mutually advantageous market opportunities in that foreign country.

(b) Review Factors.—

(1) In conducting reviews under subsection (a), the Trade Representative shall consider any evidence of actual patterns of trade (including United States exports to a foreign country of telecommunications products and services, including sales and services related to those products) that do not reflect patterns of trade which would reasonably be anticipated to flow from the concessions or commitments of such country based on the international competitive position and export potential of such products and services.

(2) The Trade Representative shall consult with the United States International Trade Commission with regard to the actual patterns of trade described in paragraph (1).

(c) Action in Response to Affirmative Determination.—

(1) Any affirmative determination made by the Trade Representative under subsection (a)(2) with respect to any act, policy, or practice of a foreign country shall, for purposes of chapter 1 of title III of the Trade Act of 1974, be treated as an affirmative determination under section 304(a)(1)(A) of such Act that such act, policy, or practice violates a trade agreement.

(2) In taking actions under section 301 by reason of paragraph (1), the Trade Representative shall first take those actions which most directly affect trade in telecommunications products and services with the priority foreign country referred to in paragraph (1), unless the Trade Representative determines that actions against other economic sectors would be more effective in achieving compliance by the foreign country with the trade agreement that is the subject of the affirmative determination made under subsection (a)(2).

SEC. 1378. COMPENSATION AUTHORITY.

If—

(1) the President has taken action under section 1376(a) with respect to any foreign country, and

(2) such action is found to be inconsistent with the international obligations of the United States, including the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the President may enter into trade agreements with such foreign country for the purpose of granting new concessions as compensation for such action in order to maintain the general level of reciprocal and mutually advantageous concessions.

SEC. 1379. CONSULTATIONS.

(a) Advice From Departments and Agencies.—Prior to taking any action under this part, the President shall seek information and advice from the interagency trade organization established under section 242(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (19 U.S.C. 1872).

(b) Advice From the Private Sector.—Before—

(1) the Trade Representative concludes the investigation conducted under section 1374(a) or takes action under section 1374(c),

(2) the President establishes specific negotiating objectives under section 1375(b) with respect to any foreign country, or

(3) the President takes action under section 1376,

the Trade Representative shall provide an opportunity for the presentation of views by any interested party with respect to such investigation, objectives, or action, including appropriate committees established pursuant to section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2155).

(c) Consultations With Congress and Official Advisors.—For purposes of conducting negotiations under section 1375(a), the Trade Representative shall keep appropriate committees of the Congress, as well as appropriate committees established pursuant to section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974, currently informed with respect to—

(1) the negotiating priorities and objectives for each priority foreign country;

(2) the assessment of negotiating prospects, both bilateral and multilateral; and

(3) any United States concessions which might be included in negotiations to achieve the objectives described in subsections (c) and (d) of section 1375.

(d) Modification of Specific Negotiating Objectives.—Before the President takes any action under section 1375(b)(2)(A) to refine or modify specific negotiating objectives, the President shall consult with the Congress and with members of the industry, and representatives of labor, affected by the proposed refinement or modification.

SEC. 1380. SUBMISSION OF DATA; ACTION TO ENSURE COMPLIANCE.

(a) Submission of Data.—The Federal Communications Commission (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Commission") shall periodically submit to appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and of the Senate any data collected and otherwise made public under Report No. DC-1105, "Information Reporting Requirements Established for Common Carriers", adopted February 25, 1988, relating to FCC Docket No. 86-494, adopted December 23, 1987.

(b) Action to Ensure Compliance.—

(1)(A) Any product of a foreign country that is subject to registration or approval by the Commission may be entered only if—

(i) such product conforms with all applicable rules and regulations of the Commission, and

(ii) the information which is required on Federal Communications Commission Form 740 on the date of enactment of this Act is provided to the appropriate customs officer at the time of such entry in such form and manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term "entered" means entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, in the customs territory of the United States.

(2) The Commission, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Trade Representative shall provide such assistance in the enforcement of paragraph (1) as the Secretary of the Treasury may request.

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall compile the information collected under paragraph (1)(A)(ii) into a summary and shall annually submit such summary to the Congress until the authority to negotiate trade agreements under part 1 of subtitle A expires. Such information shall also be made available to the public.

SEC. 1381. STUDY ON TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMPETITIVENESS IN THE UNITED STATES.

(a) In General.—The Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with the Federal Communications Commission and the United States Trade Representative, shall conduct a study of the competitiveness of the United States telecommunications industry and the effects of foreign telecommunications policies and practices on such industry in order to assist the Congress and the President in determining what actions might be necessary to preserve the competitiveness of the United States telecommunications industry.

(b) Public Comment.—The Secretary of Commerce may, as appropriate, provide notice and reasonable opportunity for public comment as part of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) Report.—The Secretary of Commerce shall, by no later than the date that is 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, submit to the Congress and the President a report on the findings and recommendations reached by the Secretary of Commerce as a result of the study conducted under subsection (a). Such report shall be referred to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and of the Senate.

SEC. 1382. INTERNATIONAL OBLIGATIONS.

Nothing in this part may be construed to require actions inconsistent with the international obligations of the United States, including the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Subtitle D—Adjustment to Import Competition

PART 1—POSITIVE ADJUSTMENT BY INDUSTRIES INJURED BY IMPORTS

SEC. 1401. POSITIVE ADJUSTMENT BY INDUSTRIES INJURED BY IMPORTS.

(a) In General.—Chapter 1 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2251-2253) is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 1—POSITIVE ADJUSTMENT BY INDUSTRIES INJURED BY IMPORTS

"SEC. 201. ACTION TO FACILITATE POSITIVE ADJUSTMENT TO IMPORT COMPETITION.

"(a) Presidential Action.—If the United States International Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to in this chapter as the 'Commission') determines under section 202(b) that an article is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to the domestic industry producing an article like or directly competitive with the imported article, the President, in accordance with this chapter, shall take all appropriate and feasible action within his power which the President determines will facilitate efforts by the domestic industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition and provide greater economic and social benefits than costs.

"(b) Positive Adjustment to Import Competition.—

"(1) For purposes of this chapter, a positive adjustment to import competition occurs when—

"(A) the domestic industry—

"(i) is able to compete successfully with imports after actions taken under section 204 terminate, or

"(ii) the domestic industry experiences an orderly transfer of resources to other productive pursuits; and

"(B) dislocated workers in the industry experience an orderly transition to productive pursuits.

"(2) The domestic industry may be considered to have made a positive adjustment to import competition even though the industry is not of the same size and composition as the industry at the time the investigation was initiated under section 202(b).

"SEC. 202. INVESTIGATIONS, DETERMINATIONS, AND RECOMMENDATIONS BY COMMISSION.

"(a) Petitions and Adjustment Plans.—

"(1) A petition requesting action under this chapter for the purpose of facilitating positive adjustment to import competition may be filed with the Commission by an entity, including a trade association, firm, certified or recognized union, or group of workers, which is representative of an industry.

"(2) A petition under paragraph (1)—

"(A) shall include a statement describing the specific purposes for which action is being sought, which may include facilitating the orderly transfer of resources to more productive pursuits, enhancing competitiveness, or other means of adjustment to new conditions of competition; and

"(B) may—

"(i) subject to subsection (d)(1)(C)(i), request provisional relief under subsection (d)(1); or

"(ii) request, or at any time before the 150th day after the date of filing be amended to request, provisional relief under subsection (d)(2).

"(3) Whenever a petition is filed under paragraph (1), the Commission shall promptly transmit copies of the petition to the Office of the United States Trade Representative and other Federal agencies directly concerned.

"(4) A petitioner under paragraph (1) may submit to the Commission and the United States Trade Representative (hereafter in this chapter referred to as the 'Trade Representative'), either with the petition, or at any time within 120 days after the date of filing of the petition, a plan to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition.

"(5)(A) Before submitting an adjustment plan under paragraph (4), the petitioner and other entities referred to in paragraph (1) that wish to participate may consult with the Trade Representative and the officers and employees of any Federal agency that is considered appropriate by the Trade Representative, for purposes of evaluating the adequacy of the proposals being considered for inclusion in the plan in relation to specific actions that may be taken under this chapter.

"(B) A request for any consultation under subparagraph (A) must be made to the Trade Representative. Upon receiving such a request, the Trade Representative shall confer with the petitioner and provide such assistance, including publication of appropriate notice in the Federal Register, as may be practicable in obtaining other participants in the consultation. No consultation may occur under subparagraph (A) unless the Trade Representative, or his delegate, is in attendance.

"(6)(A) In the course of any investigation under subsection (b), the Commission shall seek information (on a confidential basis, to the extent appropriate) on actions being taken, or planned to be taken, or both, by firms and workers in the industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition.

"(B) Regardless whether an adjustment plan is submitted under paragraph (4) by the petitioner, if the Commission makes an affirmative determination under subsection (b), any—

"(i) firm in the domestic industry;

"(ii) certified or recognized union or group of workers in the domestic industry;

"(iii) State or local community;

"(iv) trade association representing the domestic industry; or

"(v) any other person or group of persons, may, individually, submit to the Commission commitments regarding actions such persons and entities intend to take to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition.

"(7) Nothing in paragraphs (5) and (6) may be construed to provide immunity under the antitrust laws.

"(b) Investigations and Determinations by Commission.—

"(1)(A) Upon the filing of a petition under subsection (b), the request of the President or the Trade Representative, the resolution of either the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Finance of the Senate, or on its own motion, the Commission shall promptly make an investigation to determine whether an article is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to the domestic industry producing an article like or directly competitive with the imported article.

"(B) For purposes of this section, the term 'substantial cause' means a cause which is important and not less than any other cause.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Commission shall make the determination under paragraph (1) within 120 days after the date on which the petition is filed, the request or resolution is received, or the motion is adopted, as the case may be.

"(B) If before the 100th day after a petition is filed under subsection (a)(1) the Commission determines that the investigation is extraordinarily complicated, the Commission shall make the determination under paragraph (1) within 150 days after the date referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(3)(A) If the Commission makes an affirmative determination under paragraph (1) and the petitioner alleges the existence of critical circumstances, the Commission shall make a determination regarding such allegation—

"(i) on or before the 120th day after the day on which the petition was filed, if such allegation was included in the petition on or before the 90th day after such filing date; or

"(ii) on or before the date the report required under subsection (f) regarding the determination is submitted to the President, if such allegation was included in the petition after the 90th day, and on or before the 150th day, after such filing date.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph and subsection (d)(2), critical circumstances exist if a substantial increase in imports (either actual or relative to domestic production) over a relatively short period of time has led to circumstances in which a delay in taking action under this chapter would cause harm that would significantly impair the effectiveness of such action.

"(4) In the course of any proceeding under this subsection, the Commission shall, after reasonable notice, hold public hearings and shall afford interested parties and consumers an opportunity to be present, to present evidence, to comment on the adjustment plan, if any, submitted under subsection (a), and to be heard at such hearings.

"(c) Factors Applied in Making Determinations.—

"(1) In making determinations under subsection (b), the Commission shall take into account all economic factors which it considers relevant, including (but not limited to)—

"(A) with respect to serious injury—

"(i) the significant idling of productive facilities in the domestic industry,

"(ii) the inability of a significant number of firms to carry out domestic production operations at a reasonable level of profit, and

"(iii) significant unemployment or underemployment within the domestic industry;

"(B) with respect to threat of serious injury—

"(i) a decline in sales or market share, a higher and growing inventory (whether maintained by domestic producers, importers, wholesalers, or retailers), and a downward trend in production, profits, wages, or employment (or increasing underemployment) in the domestic industry,

"(ii) the extent to which firms in the domestic industry are unable to generate adequate capital to finance the modernization of their domestic plants and equipment, or are unable to maintain existing levels of expenditures for research and development,

"(iii) the extent to which the United States market is the focal point for the diversion of exports of the article concerned by reason of restraints on exports of such article to, or on imports of such article into, third country markets; and

"(C) with respect to substantial cause, an increase in imports (either actual or relative to domestic production) and a decline in the proportion of the domestic market supplied by domestic producers.

"(2) In making determinations under subsection (b), the Commission shall—

"(A) consider the condition of the domestic industry over the course of the relevant business cycle, but may not aggregate the causes of declining demand associated with a recession or economic downturn in the United States economy into a single cause of serious injury or threat of injury; and

"(B) examine factors other than imports which may be a cause of serious injury, or threat of serious injury, to the domestic industry.

The Commission shall include the results of its examination under subparagraph (B) in the report submitted by the Commission to the President under subsection (e).

"(3) The presence or absence of any factor which the Commission is required to evaluate in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) is not necessarily dispositive of whether an article is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to the domestic industry.

"(4) For purposes of subsection (b), in determining the domestic industry producing an article like or directly competitive with an imported article, the Commission—

"(A) to the extent information is available, shall, in the case of a domestic producer which also imports, treat as part of such domestic industry only its domestic production;

"(B) may, in the case of a domestic producer which produces more than one article, treat as part of such domestic industry only that portion or subdivision of the producer which produces the like or directly competitive article; and

"(C) may, in the case of one or more domestic producers which produce a like or directly competitive article in a major geographic area of the United States and whose production facilities in such area for such article constitute a substantial portion of the domestic industry in the United States and primarily serve the market in such area, and where the imports are concentrated in such area, treat as such domestic industry only that segment of the production located in such area.

"(5) In the course of any proceeding under this subsection, the Commission shall investigate any factor which in its judgment may be contributing to increased imports of the article under investigation. Whenever in the course of its investigation the Commission has reason to believe that the increased imports are attributable in part to circumstances which come within the purview of subtitles A and B of title VII or section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930, or other remedial provisions of law, the Commission shall promptly notify the appropriate agency so that such action may be taken as is otherwise authorized by such provisions of law.

"(6) For purposes of this subsection:

"(A) The term 'domestic industry' includes producers located in the United States insular possession.

"(B) The term 'significant idling of productive facilities' includes the closing of plants or the underutilization of production capacity.

"(d) Provisional Relief.—

"(1)(A) An entity representing a domestic industry that produces a perishable agricultural product that is like or directly competitive with an imported perishable agricultural product may file a request with the Trade Representative for the monitoring of imports of that product under subparagraph (B). Within 21 days after receiving the request, the Trade Representative shall determine if—

"(i) the imported product is a perishable agricultural product; and

"(ii) there is a reasonable indication that such product is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be, or likely to be, a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to such domestic industry.

"(B) If the determinations under subparagraph (A)(i) and (ii) are affirmative, the Trade Representative shall request, under section 332(g) of the Tariff Act of 1930, the Commission to monitor and investigate the imports concerned for a period not to exceed 2 years. The monitoring and investigation may include the collection and analysis of information that would expedite an investigation under subsection (b).

"(C) If a petition filed under subsection (a)—

"(i) alleges injury from imports of a perishable agricultural product that has been, on the date the allegation is included in the petition, subject to monitoring by the Commission under paragraph (2) for not less than 90 days; and

"(ii) requests that provisional relief be provided under this subsection with respect to such imports;

the Commission shall, not later than the 21st day after the day on which the request was filed, make a determination, on the basis of available information, whether increased imports (either actual or relative to domestic production) of the perishable agricultural product are a substantial cause of serious injury, or the threat thereof, to the domestic industry producing a like or directly competitive perishable product, and whether either—

"(I) the serious injury is likely to be difficult to repair by reason of perishability of the like or directly competitive agricultural product; or

"(II) the serious injury cannot be timely prevented through investigation under subsection (b) and action under section 203.

"(D) At the request of the Commission, the Secretary of Agriculture shall promptly provide to the Commission any relevant information that the Department of Agriculture may have for purposes of making determinations and findings under this subsection.

"(E) Whenever the Commission makes an affirmative preliminary determination under subparagraph (C), the Commission shall find the amount or extent of provisional relief that is necessary to prevent or remedy the serious injury or threat thereof. In carrying out this subparagraph, the Commission shall give preference to increasing or imposing a duty on imports, if such form of relief is feasible and would prevent or remedy the serious injury or threat thereof.

"(F) The Commission shall immediately report to the President its determination under subparagraph (C) and, if the determination is affirmative, the finding under subparagraph (E).

"(G) Within 7 days after receiving a report from the Commission under subparagraph (F) containing an affirmative determination, the President, if he considers provisional relief to be warranted and after taking into account the finding of the Commission under subparagraph (E), shall proclaim such provisional relief that the President considers necessary to prevent or remedy the serious injury or threat thereof.

"(2)(A) The Commission shall, at the same time it makes an affirmative determination under subsection (b)(3)(A) regarding the existence of critical circumstances, find the amount or extent of provisional relief that is appropriate to address such critical circumstances. The Commission shall immediately report to the President each such affirmative determination and finding.

"(B) After receiving a report from the Commission under subparagraph (A), the President shall, within 7 days after the day on which the report is received and after taking into account the finding of the Commission under subparagraph (A), proclaim such provisional relief, if any, that the President considers appropriate to address the critical circumstances.

"(3) If provisional relief is proclaimed under paragraph (1)(G) or (2)(B) in the form of an increase, or the imposition of, a duty, the President shall order the suspension of liquidation of all imported articles subject to the affirmative determination under paragraph (1)(C) or subsection (b)(1), as the case may be, that are entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the date of the determination.

"(4)(A) Any provisional relief implemented under this subsection with respect to an imported article shall terminate on the day on which—

"(i) if such relief was proclaimed under paragraph (1)(G), the Commission makes a negative determination under section 203(a) regarding injury or the threat thereof by imports of such article;

"(ii) action described in section 203(a)(3)(A) or (C) takes effect under section 203 with respect to such article;

"(iii) a decision by the President not to take any action under section 203(a) with respect to such article becomes final; or

"(iv) whenever the President determines that, because of changed circumstances, such relief is no longer warranted.

"(B) Any suspension of liquidation ordered under paragraph (3) with respect to an imported article shall terminate on the day on which provisional relief is terminated under subparagraph (A) with respect to the article.

"(C) If an increase in, or the imposition of, a duty that is proclaimed under section 203 on an imported article is different from a duty increase or imposition that was proclaimed for such an article under this section, then the entry of any such article for which liquidation was suspended under paragraph (3) shall be liquidated at whichever of such rates of duty is lower.

"(D) If provisional relief in the form of an increase in, or the imposition of, a duty is proclaimed under this section with respect to an imported article and neither a duty increase nor a duty imposition is proclaimed under section 203 regarding such article, the entry of any such article for which liquidation was suspended under paragraph (3) may be liquidated at the rate of duty that applied before provisional relief was provided.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection:

"(A) A perishable agricultural product is any agricultural article, including livestock, regarding which the Trade Representative considers action under this section to be appropriate after taking into account—

"(i) whether the article has—

"(I) a short shelf life,

"(II) a short growing season, or

"(III) a short marketing period,

"(ii) whether the article is treated as a perishable product under any other Federal law or regulation; and

"(iii) any other factor considered appropriate by the Trade Representative.

The presence or absence of any factor which the Trade Representative is required to take into account under clause (i), (ii), or (iii) is not necessarily dispositive of whether an article is a perishable agricultural product.

"(B) The term 'provisional relief' means—

"(i) any increase in, or imposition of, any duty;

"(ii) any modification or imposition of any quantitative restriction on the importation of an article into the United States; or

"(iii) any combination of actions under clauses (i) and (ii).

"(e) Commission Recommendations.—

"(1) If the Commission makes an affirmative determination under subsection (b)(1), the Commission shall also recommend the action that would address the serious injury, or threat thereof, to the domestic industry and be most effective in facilitating the efforts of the domestic industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition.

"(2) The Commission is authorized to recommend under paragraph (1)—

"(A) an increase in, or the imposition of, any duty on the imported article;

"(B) a tariff-rate quota on the article;

"(C) a modification or imposition of any quantitative restriction on the importation of the article into the United States;

"(D) one or more appropriate adjustment measures, including the provision of trade adjustment assistance under chapter 2; or

"(E) any combination of the actions described in subparagraphs (A) through (D).

"(3) The Commission shall specify the type, amount, and duration of the action recommended by it under paragraph (1). The limitations set forth in section 203(e) are applicable to the action recommended by the Commission.

"(4) In addition to the recommendation made under paragraph (1), the Commission may also recommend that the President—

"(A) initiate international negotiations to address the underlying cause of the increase in imports of the article or otherwise to alleviate the injury or threat; or

"(B) implement any other action authorized under law that is likely to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition.

"(5) For purposes of making its recommendation under this subsection, the Commission shall—

"(A) after reasonable notice, hold a public hearing at which all interested parties shall be provided an opportunity to present testimony and evidence; and

"(B) take into account—

"(i) the form and amount of action described in paragraph (2)(A), (B), and (C) that would prevent or remedy the injury or threat thereof,

"(ii) the objectives and actions specified in the adjustment plan, if any, submitted under subsection (a)(4),

"(iii) any individual commitment that was submitted to the Commission under subsection (a)(6),

"(iv) any information available to the Commission concerning the conditions of competition in domestic and world markets, and likely developments affecting such conditions during the period for which action is being requested, and

"(v) whether international negotiations may be constructive to address the injury or threat thereof or to facilitate adjustment.

"(6) Only those members of the Commission who agreed to the affirmative determination under subsection (b) are eligible to vote on the recommendation required to be made under paragraph (1) or that may be made under paragraph (3). Members of the Commission who did not agree to the affirmative determination may submit, in the report required under subsection (f), separate views regarding what action, if any, should be taken under section 203.

"(f) Report by Commission.—

"(1) The Commission shall submit to the President a report on each investigation undertaken under subsection (b). The report shall be submitted at the earliest practicable time, but not later than 180 days after the date on which the petition is filed, the request or resolution is received, or the motion is adopted, as the case may be.

"(2) The Commission shall include in the report required under paragraph (1) the following:

"(A) The determination made under subsection (b) and an explanation of the basis for the determination.

"(B) If the determination under subsection (b) is affirmative, the recommendations for action made under subsection (e) and an explanation of the basis for each recommendation.

"(C) Any dissenting or separate views by members of the Commission regarding the determination and any recommendation referred to in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

"(D) The findings required to be included in the report under subsection (c)(2).

"(E) A copy of the adjustment plan, if any, submitted under section 201(b)(4).

"(F) Commitments submitted, and information obtained, by the Commission regarding steps that firms and workers in the domestic industry are taking, or plan to take, to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition.

"(G) A description of—

"(i) the short- and long-term effects that implementation of the action recommended under subsection (e) is likely to have on the petitioning domestic industry, on other domestic industries, and on consumers, and

"(ii) the short- and long-term effects of not taking the recommended action on the petitioning domestic industry, its workers and the communities where production facilities of such industry is located, and on other domestic industries.

"(3) The Commission, after submitting a report to the President under paragraph (1), shall promptly make it available to the public (with the exception of the confidential information obtained under section 202(a)(6)(B) and any other information which the Commission determines to be confidential) and cause a summary thereof to be published in the Federal Register.

"(g) Expedited Consideration of Adjustment Assistance Petitions.—If the Commission makes an affirmative determination under subsection (b)(1), the Commission shall promptly notify the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Commerce of the determination. After receiving such notification—

"(1) the Secretary of Labor shall give expedited consideration to petitions by workers in the domestic industry for certification for eligibility to apply for adjustment assistance under chapter 2; and

"(2) the Secretary of Commerce shall give expedited consideration to petitions by firms in the domestic industry for certification of eligibility to apply for adjustment assistance under chapter 3.

"(h) Limitations on Investigations.—

"(1) Except for good cause determined by the Commission to exist, no investigation for the purposes of this section shall be made with respect to the same subject matter as a previous investigation under this chapter, unless 1 year has elapsed since the Commission made its report to the President of the results of such previous investigation.

"(2) If an article was the subject of an investigation under this section that resulted in any action described in section 203(a)(3) (A), (B), (C), or (E) being taken under section 203, no other investigation under this chapter may be initiated with respect to such article while such action is in effect or during the period beginning on the date on which such action terminates that is equal in duration to the period during which such action was in effect.

"SEC. 203. ACTION BY PRESIDENT AFTER DETERMINATION OF IMPORT INJURY.

"(a) In General.—

"(1)(A) After receiving a report under section 202(f) containing an affirmative finding regarding serious injury, or the threat thereof, to a domestic industry, the President shall take all appropriate and feasible action within his power which the President determines will facilitate efforts by the domestic industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition and provide greater economic and social benefits than costs.

"(B) The action taken by the President under subparagraph (A) shall be to such extent, and for such duration, subject to subsection (e)(1), that the President determines to be appropriate and feasible under such subparagraph.

"(C) The interagency trade organization established under section 242(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 shall, with respect to each affirmative determination reported under section 202(f), make a recommendation to the President as to what action the President should take under subparagraph (A).

"(2) In determining what action to take under paragraph (1), the President shall take into account—

"(A) the recommendation and report of the Commission;

"(B) the extent to which workers and firms in the domestic industry are—

"(i) benefitting from adjustment assistance and other manpower programs, and

"(ii) engaged in worker retraining efforts;

"(C) the efforts being made, or to be implemented, by the domestic industry (including the efforts included in any adjustment plan or commitment submitted to the Commission under section 201(b)) to make a positive adjustment to import competition;

"(D) the probable effectiveness of the actions authorized under paragraph (3) to facilitate positive adjustment to import competition;

"(E) the short- and long-term economic and social costs of the actions authorized under paragraph (3) relative to their short- and long-term economic and social benefits and other considerations relative to the position of the domestic industry in the United States economy;

"(F) other factors related to the national economic interest of the United States, including, but not limited to—

"(i) the economic and social costs which would be incurred by taxpayers, communities, and workers if import relief were not provided under this chapter,

"(ii) the effect of the implementation of actions under this section on consumers and on competition in domestic markets for articles, and

"(iii) the impact on United States industries and firms as a result of international obligations regarding compensation;

"(G) the extent to which there is diversion of foreign exports to the United States market by reason of foreign restraints;

"(H) the potential for circumvention of any action taken under this section;

"(I) the national security interests of the United States; and

"(J) the factors required to be considered by the Commission under section 202(e)(5).

"(3) The President may, for purposes of taking action under paragraph (1)—

"(A) proclaim an increase in, or the imposition of, any duty on the imported article;

"(B) proclaim a tariff-rate quota on the article;

"(C) proclaim a modification or imposition of any quantitative restriction on the importation of the article into the United States;

"(D) implement one or more appropriate adjustment measures, including the provision of trade adjustment assistance under chapter 2;

"(E) negotiate, conclude, and carry out orderly marketing agreements with foreign countries limiting the export from foreign countries and the import into the United States of such article;

"(G) initiate international negotiations to address the underlying cause of the increase in imports of the article or otherwise to alleviate the injury or threat thereof;

"(H) submit to Congress legislative proposals to facilitate the efforts of the domestic industry to make a positive adjustment to import competition;

"(I) take any other action which may be taken by the President under the authority of law and which the President considers appropriate and feasible for purposes of paragraph (1); and

"(J) take any combination of actions listed in subparagraphs (A) through (I).

"(4) The President shall take action under paragraph (1) within 60 days after receiving a report from the Commission containing an affirmative determination under section 202(b)(1) (or a determination under such section which he considers to be an affirmative determination by reason of section 330(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930); except that if a supplemental report is requested under paragraph (5), the President shall take action under paragraph (1) within 30 days after the supplemental report is received.

"(5) The President may, within 15 days after the date on which he receives a report from the Commission containing an affirmative determination under section 202(b)(1), request additional information from the Commission. The Commission shall, as soon as practicable but in no event more than 30 days after the date on which it receives the President's request, furnish additional information with respect to the industry in a supplemental report.

"(b) Reports to Congress.—

"(1) On the day the President takes action under subsection (a)(1), the President shall transmit to Congress a document describing the action and the reasons for taking the action. "(2) During the course of the evaluation conducted under paragraph (1), the Commission shall, after reasonable public notice, hold a hearing on the effectiveness of the action. SEC. 1906. SENSE OF CONGRESS REQUESTING THE PRESIDENT TO INSTRUCT THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO ENFORCE SECTION 307 OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930 WITHOUT DELAY.

(a) Congressional Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) its February 1983 report to the Congress on forced labor in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Department of State confirmed that Soviet forced labor is used "to produce large amounts of primary and manufactured goods for both domestic and Western export markets", and that such labor is used as an integral part of Soviet national economy;

(2) the Central Intelligence Agency has compiled a list of over three dozen products made by Soviet forced labor and imported by the United States, and that items on the September 27, 1983 list include chemicals, gold, uranium, aluminum, wood products and glassware;

(3) the International Commission on Human Rights has concluded that the Soviet Union "continues the deplorable practice of forced labor in manufacturing and construction projects" and that prisoners "are forced to work under conditions of extreme hardship including malnutrition, inadequate shelter and clothing, and severe discipline";

(4) the Congress is on record as opposing forced labor, having enacted a prohibition (in section 307 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1307)) on the importation of goods made with such labor and having passed in the Ninety-eighth Congress by unanimous vote a resolution calling such practices morally reprehensible and calling upon the President to express to the Soviet Union the opposition of the United States to such policies;

(5) the prohibition enacted by the Congress declares that "goods, wares, articles, and merchandise mined, produced or manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor or/and forced labor or/and indentured labor under penal sanctions shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited";

(6) there is ample knowledge of the Soviet forced labor system to require enforcement of the prohibition contained in section 307 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1307); and

(7) the delay in enforcing the law brings into question the commitment of the United States to protest the inhumane treatment of prisoners in the Soviet Gulag, an estimated ten thousand of whom are political and religious prisoners according to the Department of State.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of the Congress that the President should express to the Soviet Union in the firmest possible terms the strong moral opposition of the United States to the slave labor policies of the Soviet Union by every means possible, including refusing to permit the importation into the United States of any products made in whole or in part by such labor.

(c) Presidential Action.—The President is hereby requested to instruct the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce section 307 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1307) without delay.

(b) Marking of Containers of Imported Mushrooms.—Imported preserved mushrooms shall not be considered to be in compliance with section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1304) or any other law relating to the marking of imported articles unless the containers thereof indicate in English the country in which the mushrooms were grown.

(c) Native-American Style Jewelry and Native-American Style Arts and Crafts.—By no later than the date that is 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe and implement regulations under section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1304) which require, to the greatest extent possible, that all Native-American style jewelry and Native-American style arts and crafts that are imported into the United States have the English name of the country of origin of such jewelry or arts and crafts indelibly marked in a conspicuous place on such jewelry or arts and crafts by a permanent method of marking.

SEC. 1908. DUTY-FREE SALES ENTERPRISES.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) duty-free sales enterprises play a significant role in attracting international passengers to the United States and thereby their operations favorably affect our balance of payments;

(2) concession fees derived from the operations of authorized duty-free sales enterprises constitute an important source of revenue for the State, local and other governmental authorities that collect such fees;

(3) there is inadequate statutory and regulatory recognition of, and guidelines for the operation of, duty-free sales enterprises; and

(4) there is a need to encourage uniformity and consistency of regulation of duty-free sales enterprises.

(b) In General.—Section 555(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1555(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Duty-Free Sales Enterprises.—

"(2) A duty-free sales enterprise may be located anywhere within—

"(A) the same port of entry, as established under section 1 of the Act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 434), from which a purchaser of duty-free merchandise departs the customs territory; or

"(B) 25 statute miles from the exit point through which the purchaser of duty-free merchandise will depart the customs territory.

"(3) Each duty-free sales enterprise—

"(A) shall establish procedures to provide reasonable assurance that duty-free merchandise sold by the enterprise will be exported from the customs territory;

"(C) shall display in prominent places within its place of business notices which state clearly that any duty-free merchandise purchased from the enterprise—

"(i) has not been subject to any Federal duty or tax,

"(ii) if brought back into the customs territory, must be declared and is subject to Federal duty and tax, and

"(iii) is subject to the customs laws and regulation of any foreign country to which it is taken;

"(D) shall not be required to mark or otherwise place a distinguishing identifier on individual items of merchandise to indicate that the items were sold by a duty-free sales enterprise, unless the Secretary finds a pattern in which such items are being brought back into the customs territory without declaration;

"(E) may unpack merchandise into saleable units after it has been entered for warehouse and placed in a duty-free sales enterprise, without requirement of further permits; and

"(F) shall deliver duty-free merchandise—

"(i) in the case of a duty-free sales enterprise that is an airport store—

"(I) to the purchaser (or a family member or companion traveling with the purchaser) in an area that is within the airport and to which access to passengers is restricted to those departing from the customs territory;

"(II) to the purchaser (or a family member or companion traveling with the purchaser) at the exit point of a specific departing flight;

"(III) by placing the merchandise within the aircraft on which the purchaser will depart for carriage as passenger baggage; or

"(IV) if the duty-free sales enterprise has made a good faith effort to effect delivery for exportation through one of the methods described in subclause (I), (II), or (III) but is unable to do so, by any other reasonable method to effect delivery; or

"(ii) in the case of a duty-free sales enterprise that is a border store—

"(I) at a merchandise storage location at or beyond the exit point; or

"(II) at any location approved by the Secretary before the date of enactment of the Omnibus Trade Act of 1987.

"(4) If a State or local or other governmental authority, incident to its jurisdiction over any airport, seaport, or other exit point facility, requires that a concession or other form of approval be obtained from that authority with respect to the operation of a duty-free sales enterprise under which merchandise is delivered to or through such facility for exportation, merchandise incident to such operation may not be withdrawn from a bonded warehouse and transferred to or through such facility unless the operator of the duty-free sales enterprise demonstrates to the Secretary that the concession or approval required for the enterprise has been obtained.

(1) the trade elements of the Caribbean Basin Initiative be strengthened in a manner consistent with the promotion of economic and political stability in the Caribbean and Central America;

(2) to the extent that Congress imposes changes that are intended to improve the competitive environment for United States industry and workers, such changes do not unduly affect the unilateral duty-free trade system available to the beneficiary countries designated under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act; and

(3) generic changes in the trade laws of the United States do not discriminate against imports from designated beneficiary countries in relation to imports from other United States trading partners.

(c) Withdrawal or Suspension of Duty-Free Treatment to Specific Articles.—Subsection (e) of section 212 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2702(e)) is amended to read as follows:

States foreign economic assistance programs; and

SEC. 2206. PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY.

It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the Secretary of State should urge international technical organizations, such as the World Intellectual Property Organization, to provide expertise and cooperate fully in developing effective standards, in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, for the international protection of intellectual property rights; and

(2) development assistance programs administered by the Agency for International Development, especially the reimbursable development program, should, in cooperation with the Copyright Office and the Patent and Trademark Office, include technical training for officials responsible for the protection of patents, copyrights, trademarks, and mask works in those countries that receive such development assistance.

SEC. 2208. JAPANESE IMPORTATION OF MANUFACTURED GOODS FROM LESS DEVELOPED COUNTRIES.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Japan's merchandise trade surplus rose from $62,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1985 to $101,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1986;

(2) these surpluses pose a grave threat to the free trade system;

(3) Japan's most important contribution to the international trading system would be to commit itself as a nation to import with vigor, just as it has exported with vigor in recent decades;

(4) Japan should particularly increase its imports of manufactured goods; and

(5) Japan's share of the exports of less developed countries has declined from 10.6 percent in 1979 to below 8 percent in 1985.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) by taking its proportionate share of the manufactured exports of developing countries, Japan will promote not only its economic development but the economic conditions conducive to democracy;

(2) expanding markets for the manufactured exports of less developed countries will directly benefit the United States, and, if less developed countries are able to increase exports to Japan, these countries will be able to earn more of the hard currency needed to service their foreign debt obligations and make the investments necessary to chart a course of solid economic growth; and

(3) if less developed countries are able to export manufactured goods to Japan, they will be under less pressure to divert exports to the United States market.

SEC. 2209. JAPAN AND THE ARAB BOYCOTT OF ISRAEL.

SEC. 2210. FACILITATION OF JEWELRY TRADE.

It is the sense of the Congress that the United States should become a party to the Convention on the Control and Marking of Articles of Precious Metals in order to facilitate the efforts of the United States jewelry industry in penetrating foreign markets.

SEC. 2211. LOAN GUARANTEES.

Section 108 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151f) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i)(1) To carry out the purposes of subsection (a), in addition to the other authorities set forth in this section, the agency primarily responsible for administering this part is authorized to issue guarantees on such terms and conditions as it shall determine assuring against losses incurred in connection with loans made to projects that meet the criteria set forth in subsection (c). The full faith and credit of the United States is hereby pledged for the full payment and performance of such guarantees.

"(2) Loans guaranteed under this subsection shall be on such terms and conditions as the agency may prescribe, except for the following:

"(A) The agency shall issue guarantees only when it is necessary to alleviate a credit market imperfection.

"(B) Loans guaranteed shall provide for complete amortization within a period not to exceed ten years or, if the principal purpose of the guaranteed loan is to finance the construction or purchase of a physical asset with a useful life of less than ten years, within a period not to exceed such useful life.

"(C) No loan guaranteed to any one borrower may exceed 50 percent of the cost of the activity to be financed, or $3,000,000, whichever is less, as determined by the agency.

"(D) No loan may be guaranteed unless the agency determines that the lender is responsible and that adequate provision is made for servicing the loan on reasonable terms and protecting the financial interest of the United States.

"(E) The fees earned from the loan guarantees issued under this subsection shall be deposited in the revolving fund account as part of the guarantee reserve established under paragraph (5) of this subsection. Fees shall be assessed at a level such that the fees received, plus the funds from the revolving fund account placed in the guarantee reserve, satisfy the requirements of paragraph (5). Fees shall be reviewed every twelve months to ensure that the fees assessed on new loan guarantees are at the required level.

"(F) Any guarantee shall be conclusive evidence that such guarantee has been properly obtained, and that the underlying loan as contracted qualifies for such guarantee. Except for fraud or material misrepresentation for which the parties seeking payment under such guarantee are responsible, such guarantee shall be presumed to be valid, legal, and enforceable.

"(G) The agency shall determine that the standards used by the lender for assessing the credit risk of new and existing guaranteed loans are reasonable. The agency shall require that there be a reasonable assurance of repayment before credit assistance is extended.

"(H) Commitments to guarantee loans may be made by the agency only to the extent that the total loan principal, any part of which is guaranteed, will not exceed the amount specified in annual appropriations Acts.

"(3) To the extent that fees are not sufficient as specified under paragraph (2)(E) to cover expected future liabilities, appropriations are authorized to maintain an appropriate reserve.

"(4) The losses guaranteed under this subsection may be in dollars or in other currencies. In the case of loans in currencies other than dollars, the guarantees issued shall be subject to an overall payment limitation expressed in dollars.

"(5) The agency shall segregate in the revolving fund account and hold as a reserve an amount estimated to be sufficient to cover the agency's expected net liabilities on the loan guarantees outstanding under this subsection; except that the amount held in reserve shall not be less than 25 percent of the principal amount of the agency's outstanding contingent liabilities on such guarantees. Any payments made to discharge liabilities arising from the loan guarantees shall be paid first out of the assets in the revolving fund account and next out of other funds made available for this purpose.".

SEC. 2418. FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 5(f) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(f)) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—

"(1) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY TO CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—(A) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense and other appropriate Government agencies and with appropriate technical advisory committees established pursuant to subsection (h) of this section, shall review, on a continuing basis, the availability to controlled countries, from sources outside the United States, including countries which participate with the United States in multilateral export controls, of any goods or technology the export of which requires a validated license under this section. In any case in which the Secretary determines, in accordance with procedures and criteria which the Secretary shall by regulation establish, that any such goods or technology are available in fact to controlled countries from such sources in sufficient quantity and of comparable quality so that the requirement of a validated license for the export of such goods or technology is or would be ineffective in achieving the purpose set forth in subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary may not, after the determination is made, require a validated license for the export of such goods or technology during the period of such foreign availability, unless the President determines that the absence of export controls under this section on the goods or technology would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In any case in which the President determines under this paragraph that export controls under this section must be maintained notwithstanding foreign availability, the Secretary shall publish that determination, together with a concise statement of its basis and the estimated economic impact of the decision.

"(B) The Secretary shall approve any application for a validated license which is required under this section for the export of any goods or technology to a controlled country and which meets all other requirements for such an application, if the Secretary determines that such goods or technology will, if the license is denied, be available in fact to such country from sources outside the United States, including countries which participate with the United States in multilateral export controls, in sufficient quantity and of comparable quality so that denial of the license would be ineffective in achieving the purpose set forth in subsection (a) of this section, unless the President determines that approving the license application would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In any case in which the Secretary makes a determination of foreign availability under this subparagraph with respect to any goods or technology, the Secretary shall determine whether a determination of foreign availability under subparagraph (A) with respect to such goods or technology is warranted.

"(2) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY TO OTHER THAN CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—(A) The Secretary shall review, on a continuing basis, the availability to countries other than controlled countries, from sources outside the United States, of any goods or technology the export of which requires a validated license under this section. If the Secretary determines, in accordance with procedures which the Secretary shall establish, that any goods or technology in sufficient quantity and of comparable quality are available in fact from sources outside the United States (other than availability under license from a country which maintains export controls on such goods or technology cooperatively with the United States pursuant to the agreement of the group known as the Coordinating Committee or pursuant to an agreement described in subsection (k) of this section), the Secretary may not, after the determination is made and during the period of such foreign availability, require a validated license for the export of such goods or technology to any country (other than a controlled country) to which the country from which the goods or technology is available does not place controls on the export of such goods or technology. The requirement with respect to a validated license in the preceding sentence shall not apply if the President determines that the absence of export controls under this section on the goods or technology would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In any case in which the President determines under this paragraph that export controls under this section must be maintained notwithstanding foreign availability, the Secretary shall publish that determination, together with a concise statement of its basis and the estimated economic impact of the decision.

"(B) The Secretary shall approve any application for a validated license which is required under this section for the export of any goods or technology to a country (other than a controlled country) and which meets all other requirements for such an application, if the Secretary determines that such goods or technology are available from foreign sources to that country under the criteria established in subparagraph (A), unless the President determines that approving the license application would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In any case in which the Secretary makes a determination of foreign availability under this subparagraph with respect to any goods or technology, the Secretary shall determine whether a determination of foreign availability under subparagraph (A) with respect to such goods or technology is warranted.

"(3) PROCEDURES FOR MAKING DETERMINATIONS.—(A) The Secretary shall make a foreign availability determination under paragraph (1) or (2) on the Secretary's own initiative or upon receipt of an allegation from an export license applicant that such availability exists. In making any such determination, the Secretary shall accept the representations of applicants made in writing and supported by reasonable evidence, unless such representations are contradicted by reliable evidence, including scientific or physical examination, expert opinion based upon adequate factual information, or intelligence information. In making determinations of foreign availability, the Secretary may consider such factors as cost, reliability, the availability and reliability of spare parts and the cost and quality thereof, maintenance programs, durability, quality of end products produced by the item proposed for export, and scale of production. For purposes of this subparagraph, 'evidence' may include such items as foreign manufacturers' catalogues, brochures, or operations or maintenance manuals, articles from reputable trade publications, photographs, and depositions based upon eyewitness accounts.

"(B) In a case in which an allegation is received from an export license applicant, the Secretary shall, upon receipt of the allegation, submit for publication in the Federal Register notice of such receipt. Within 4 months after receipt of the allegation, the Secretary shall determine whether the foreign availability exists, and shall so notify the applicant. If the Secretary has determined that the foreign availability exists, the Secretary shall, upon making such determination, submit the determination for review to other departments and agencies as the Secretary considers appropriate. The Secretary's determination of foreign availability does not require the concurrence or approval of any official, department, or agency to which such a determination is submitted. Not later than 1 month after the Secretary makes the determination, the Secretary shall respond in writing to the applicant and submit for publication in the Federal Register, that—

"(i) the foreign availability does exist and—

"(I) the requirement of a validated license has been removed,

"(II) the President has determined that export controls under this section must be maintained notwithstanding the foreign availability and the applicable steps are being taken under paragraph (4), or

"(III) in the case of a foreign availability determination under paragraph (1), the foreign availability determination will be submitted to a multilateral review process in accordance with the agreement of the Coordinating Committee for a period of not more than 4 months beginning on the date of the publication; or

"(ii) the foreign availability does not exist.

In any case in which the submission for publication is not made within the time period specified in the preceding sentence, the Secretary may not thereafter require a license for the export of the goods or technology with respect to which the foreign availability allegation was made. In the case of a foreign availability determination under paragraph (1) to which clause (i)(III) applies, no license for such export may be required after the end of the 9-month period beginning on the date on which the allegation is received.

"(4) NEGOTIATIONS TO ELIMINATE FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—(A) In any case in which export controls are maintained under this section notwithstanding foreign availability, on account of a determination by the President that the absence of the controls would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States, the President shall actively pursue negotiations with the governments of the appropriate foreign countries for the purpose of eliminating such availability. No later than the commencement of such negotiations, the President shall notify in writing the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives that he has begun such negotiations and why he believes it is important to national security that export controls on the goods or technology involved be maintained.

"(B) If, within 6 months after the President's determination that export controls be maintained, the foreign availability has not been eliminated, the Secretary may not, after the end of that 6-month period, require a validated license for the export of the goods or technology involved. The President may extend the 6-month period described in the preceding sentence for an additional period of 12 months if the President certifies to the Congress that the negotiations involved are progressing and that the absence of the export controls involved would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. Whenever the President has reason to believe that goods or technology subject to export controls for national security purposes by the United States may become available from other countries to controlled countries and that such availability can be prevented or eliminated by means of negotiations with such other countries, the President shall promptly initiate negotiations with the governments of such other countries to prevent such foreign availability.

"(C) After an agreement is reached with a country pursuant to negotiations under this paragraph to eliminate or prevent foreign availability of goods or technology, the Secretary may not require a validated license for the export of such goods or technology to that country.

"(5) EXPEDITED LICENSES FOR ITEMS AVAILABLE TO COUNTRIES OTHER THAN CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—(A) In any case in which the Secretary finds that any goods or technology from foreign sources is of similar quality to goods or technology the export of which requires a validated license under this section and is available to a country other than a controlled country without effective restrictions, the Secretary shall designate such goods or technology as eligible for export to such country under this paragraph.

"(B) In the case of goods or technology designated under subparagraph (A), then 20 working days after the date of formal filing with the Secretary of an individual validated license application for the export of those goods or technology to an eligible country, a license for the transaction specified in the application shall become valid and effective and the goods or technology are authorized for export pursuant to such license unless the license has been denied by the Secretary on account of an inappropriate end user. The Secretary may extend the 20-day period provided in the preceding sentence for an additional period of 15 days if the Secretary requires additional time to consider the application and so notifies the applicant.

"(C) The Secretary may make a foreign availability determination under subparagraph (A) on the Secretary's own initiative, upon receipt of an allegation from an export license applicant that such availability exists, or upon the submission of a certification by a technical advisory committee of appropriate jurisdiction that such availability exists. Upon receipt of such an allegation or certification, the Secretary shall publish notice of such allegation or certification in the Federal Register and shall make the foreign availability determination within 30 days after such receipt and publish the determination in the Federal Register. In the case of the failure of the Secretary to make and publish such determination within that 30-day period, the goods or technology involved shall be deemed to be designated as eligible for export to the country or countries involved, for purposes of subparagraph (B).

"(D) The provisions of paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) do not apply with respect to determinations of foreign availability under this paragraph.

"(6) OFFICE OF FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—The Secretary shall establish in the Department of Commerce an Office of Foreign Availability, which shall be under the direction of the Under Secretary of Commerce for Export Administration. The Office shall be responsible for gathering and analyzing all the necessary information in order for the Secretary to make determinations of foreign availability under this Act. The Secretary shall make available to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate at the end of each 6-month period during a fiscal year information on the operations of the Office, and on improvements in the Government's ability to assess foreign availability, during that 6-month period, including information on the training of personnel, the use of computers, and the use of Commercial Service Officers of the United States and Foreign Commercial Service. Such information shall also include a description of representative determinations made under this Act during that 6-month period that foreign availability did or did not exist (as the case may be), together with an explanation of such determinations.

"(7) SHARING OF INFORMATION.—Each department or agency of the United States, including any intelligence agency, and all contractors with any such department or agency, shall, upon the request of the Secretary and consistent with the protection of intelligence sources and methods, furnish information to the Office of Foreign Availability concerning foreign availability of goods and technology subject to export controls under this Act. Each such department or agency shall allow the Office of Foreign Availability access to any information from a laboratory or other facility within such department or agency.

"(8) REMOVAL OF CONTROLS ON LESS SOPHISTICATED GOODS OR TECHNOLOGY.—In any case in which Secretary may not, pursuant to paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of this subsection or paragraph (6) of subsection (h) of this section, require a validated license for the export of goods or technology, then the Secretary may not require a validated license for the export of any similar goods or technology whose function, technological approach, performance thresholds, and other attributes that form the basis for export controls under this section do not exceed the technical parameters of the goods or technology from which the validated license requirement is removed under the applicable paragraph.

"(9) NOTICE OF ALL FOREIGN AVAILABILITY ASSESSMENTS.—Whenever the Secretary undertakes a foreign availability assessment under this subsection or subsection (h)(6), the Secretary shall publish notice of such assessment in the Federal Register.

"(10) AVAILABILITY DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection and subsections (f) and (h), the term 'available in fact to controlled countries' includes production or availability of any goods or technology in any country—

"(A) from which the goods or technology is not restricted for export to any controlled country; or

"(B) in which such export restrictions are determined by the Secretary to be ineffective.

For purposes of subparagraph (B), the mere inclusion of goods or technology on a list of goods or technology subject to bilateral or multilateral national security export controls shall not alone constitute credible evidence that a country provides an effective means of controlling the export of such goods or technology to controlled countries.".

(b) TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE DETERMINATIONS.—Section 5(h)(6) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(h)(6)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "After an agreement is reached with a country pursuant to negotiations under this paragraph to eliminate foreign availability of goods or technology, the Secretary may not require a validated license for the export of such goods or technology to that country.".

"(iii) below which no authority or permission to export may be required under subsection (b)(2) or (b)(3) of this section.

The Secretary shall make appropriate adjustments to such performance levels based on these reviews.

"(B) In any case in which the Secretary receives a request which—

"(i) is to revise the qualification requirements or minimum thresholds of any goods eligible for export under a distribution license, and

"(ii) is made by an exporter of such goods, representatives of an industry which produces such goods, or a technical advisory committee established under subsection (h) of this section, the Secretary, after consulting with other appropriate Government agencies and technical advisory committees established under subsection (h) of this section, shall determine whether to make such revision, or some other appropriate revision, in such qualification requirements or minimum thresholds. In making this determination, the Secretary shall take into account the availability of the goods from sources outside the United States. The Secretary shall make a determination on a request made under this subparagraph within 90 days after the date on which the request is filed. If the Secretary's determination pursuant to such a request is to make a revision, such revision shall be implemented within 120 days after the date on which the request is filed and shall be published in the Federal Register.".

PART II—MULTILATERAL EXPORT CONTROL ENHANCEMENT

SEC. 2441. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Multilateral Export Control Enhancement Amendments Act".

SEC. 2442. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The diversion of advanced milling machinery to the Soviet Union by the Toshiba Machine Company and Kongsberg Trading Company has had a serious impact on United States and Western security interests.

(2) United States and Western security is undermined without the cooperation of the governments and nationals of all countries participating in the group known as the Coordinating Committee (hereafter in this part referred to as "COCOM") in enforcing the COCOM agreement.

(3) It is the responsibility of all governments participating in COCOM to place in effect strong national security export control laws, to license strategic exports carefully, and to enforce those export control laws strictly, since the COCOM system is only as strong as the national laws and enforcement on which it is based.

(4) It is also important for corporations to implement effective internal control systems to ensure compliance with export control laws.

(5) In order to protect United States national security, the United States must take steps to ensure the compliance of foreign companies with COCOM controls, including, where necessary conditions have been met, the imposition of sanctions against violators of controls commensurate with the severity of the violation.

SEC. 2443. MANDATORY SANCTIONS AGAINST TOSHIBA AND KONGSBERG.

(a) SANCTIONS AGAINST TOSHIBA MACHINE COMPANY, KONGSBERG TRADING COMPANY, AND CERTAIN OTHER FOREIGN PERSONS.—(1) The President shall impose, for a period of 3 years—

(1) a prohibition on contracting with, and procurement of products and services from—

(A) Toshiba Machine Company and Kongsberg Trading Company, and

(B) any other foreign person whom the President finds to have knowingly facilitated the diversion of advanced milling machinery by Toshiba Machine Company and Kongsberg Trading Company to the Soviet Union, by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government; and

(2) a prohibition on the importation into the United States of all products produced by Toshiba Machine Company, Kongsberg Trading Company, and any foreign person described in paragraph (1)(B).

(b) SANCTIONS AGAINST TOSHIBA CORPORATION AND KONGSBERG VAAPENFABRIKK.—The President shall impose, for a period of 3 years, a prohibition on contracting with, and procurement of products and services from, the Toshiba Corporation and Kongsberg Vaapenfabrikk, by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government.

(c) EXCEPTIONS.—The President shall not apply sanctions under this section—

(1) in the case of procurement of defense articles or defense services—

(A) under existing contracts or subcontracts, including exercise of options for production quantities to satisfy United States operational military requirements;

(B) if the President determines that the company or foreign person to whom the sanctions would otherwise be applied is a sole source supplier of essential defense articles or services and no alternative supplier can be identified; or

(C) if the President determines that such articles or services are essential to the national security under defense coproduction agreements; or

(2) to—

(A) products or services provided under contracts or other binding agreements (as such terms are defined by the President in regulations) entered into before June 30, 1987;

(B) spare parts;

(C) component parts, but not finished products, essential to United States products or production;

(D) routine servicing and maintenance of products; or

(E) information and technology.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "component part" means any article which is not usable for its intended functions without being imbedded or integrated into any other product and which, if used in production of a finished product, would be substantially transformed in that process;

(2) the term "finished product" means any article which is usable for its intended functions without being imbedded in or integrated into any other product, but in no case shall such term be deemed to include an article produced by a person other than a sanctioned person that contains parts or components of the sanctioned person if the parts or components have been substantially transformed during production of the finished product; and

(3) the term "sanctioned person" means a company or other foreign person upon whom prohibitions have been imposed under subsection (a) or (b).

SEC. 2444. MANDATORY SANCTIONS FOR FUTURE VIOLATIONS.

The Act is amended by inserting after section 11 the following new section:

"MULTILATERAL EXPORT CONTROL VIOLATIONS

"SEC. 11A. (a) DETERMINATION BY THE PRESIDENT.—The President, subject to subsection (c), shall apply sanctions under subsection (b) for a period of not less than 2 years and not more than 5 years, if the President determines that—

"(1) a foreign person has violated any regulation issued by a country to control exports for national security purposes pursuant to the agreement of the group known as the Coordinating Committee, and

"(2) such violation has resulted in substantial enhancement of Soviet and East bloc capabilities in submarine or antisubmarine warfare, ballistic or antiballistic missile technology, strategic aircraft, command, control, communications and intelligence, or other critical technologies as determined by the President, on the advice of the National Security Council, to represent a serious adverse impact on the strategic balance of forces.

The President shall notify the Congress of each action taken under this section. This section, except subsections (h) and (j), applies only to violations that occur after the date of the enactment of the Export Enhancement Act of 1988.

"(b) SANCTIONS.—The sanctions referred to in subsection (a) shall apply to the foreign person committing the violation, as well as to any parent, affiliate, subsidiary, and successor entity of the foreign person, and, except as provided in subsection (c), are as follows:

"(1) a prohibition on contracting with, and procurement of products and services from, a sanctioned person, by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government, and

"(2) a prohibition on importation into the United States of all products produced by a sanctioned person.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS.—The President shall not apply sanctions under this section—

"(1) in the case of procurement of defense articles or defense services—

"(A) under existing contracts or subcontracts, including the exercise of options for production quantities to satisfy United States operational military requirements;

"(B) if the President determines that the foreign person or other entity to which the sanctions would otherwise be applied is a sole source supplier of essential defense articles or services and no alternative supplier can be identified; or

"(C) if the President determines that such articles or services are essential to the national security under defense coproduction agreements; or

"(2) to—

"(A) products or services provided under contracts or other binding agreements (as such terms are defined by the President in regulations) entered into before the date on which the President notifies the Congress of the intention to impose the sanctions;

"(B) spare parts;

"(C) component parts, but not finished products, essential to United States products or production;

"(D) routine servicing and maintenance of products; or

"(E) information and technology.

"(d) EXCLUSION.—The President shall not apply sanctions under this section to a parent, affiliate, subsidiary, and successor entity of a foreign person if the President determines that—

"(1) the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity (as the case may be) has not knowingly violated the export control regulation violated by the foreign person, and

"(2) the government of the country with jurisdiction over the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity had in effect, at the time of the violation by the foreign person, an effective export control system consistent with principles agreed to in the Coordinating Committee, including the following:

"(A) national laws providing appropriate civil and criminal penalties and statutes of limitations sufficient to deter potential violations;

"(B) a program to evaluate export license applications that includes sufficient technical expertise to assess the licensing status of exports and ensure the reliability of end-users;

"(C) an enforcement mechanism that provides authority for trained enforcement officers to investigate and prevent illegal exports;

"(D) a system of export control documentation to verify the movement of goods and technology; and

"(E) procedures for the coordination and exchange of information concerning violations of the agreement of the Coordinating Committee.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'component part' means any article which is not usable for its intended functions without being imbedded in or integrated into any other product and which, if used in production of a finished product, would be substantially transformed in that process;

"(2) the term 'finished product' means any article which is usable for its intended functions without being imbedded or integrated into any other product, but in no case shall such term be deemed to include an article produced by a person other than a sanctioned person that contains parts or components of the sanctioned person if the parts or components have been substantially transformed during production of the finished product; and

"(3) the term 'sanctioned person' means a foreign person, and any parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity of the foreign person, upon whom sanctions have been imposed under this section.

"(f) Subsequent Modifications of Sanctions.—The President may, after consultation with the Congress, limit the scope of sanctions applied to a parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity of the foreign person determined to have committed the violation on account of which the sanctions were imposed if the President determines that—

"(1) the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity (as the case may be) has not, on the basis of available evidence, itself violated the export control regulation involved, either directly or through a course of conduct;

"(2) the government with jurisdiction over the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity has improved its export control system as measured by the criteria set forth in subsection (d)(2);

"(3) the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity, has instituted improvements in internal controls sufficient to detect and prevent violations of the export control regime implemented under paragraph (2); and

"(4) the impact of the sanctions imposed on the parent, affiliate, subsidiary, or successor entity is proportionate to the increased defense expenditures imposed on the United States.

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the President may not limit the scope of the sanction referred to in subsection (b)(1) with respect to the parent of the foreign person determined to have committed the violation, until that sanction has been in effect for at least 2 years.

"(g) Reports to Congress.—The President shall include in the annual report submitted under section 14, a report on the status of any sanctions imposed under this section, including any exceptions, exclusions, or modifications of sanctions that have been applied under subsection (c), (d), or (f).

"(h) Discretionary Imposition of Sanctions.—If the President determines that a foreign person has violated a regulation issued by a country to control exports for national security purposes pursuant to the agreement of the group known as the Coordinating Committee, but in a case in which subsection (a)(2) may not apply, the President may apply the sanctions referred to in subsection (b) against that foreign person for a period of not more than 5 years.

"(i) Compensation for Diversion of Militarily Critical Technologies to Controlled Countries.—(1) In cases in which sanctions have been applied against a foreign person under subsection (a), the President shall initiate discussions with the foreign person and the government with jurisdiction over that foreign person regarding compensation on the part of the foreign person in an amount proportionate to the costs of research and development and procurement of new defensive systems by the United States and the allies of the United States to counteract the effect of the technological advance achieved by the Soviet Union as a result of the violation by that foreign person.

"(2) The President shall, at the time that discussions are initiated under paragraph (1), report to the Congress that such discussions are being undertaken, and shall report to the Congress the outcome of those discussions.

"(j) Other Actions by the President.—Upon making a determination under subsection (a) or (h), the President shall—

"(1) initiate consultations with the foreign government with jurisdiction over the foreign person who committed the violation involved, in order to seek prompt remedial action by that government;

"(2) initiate discussions with the governments participating in the Coordinating Committee regarding the violation and means to ensure that similar violations do not occur; and

"(3) consult with and report to the Congress on the nature of the violation and the actions the President proposes to take, or has taken, to rectify the situation.

"(k) Damages for Certain Violations.—(1) In any case in which the President makes a determination under subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense shall determine the costs of restoring the military preparedness of the United States on account of the violation involved. The Secretary of Defense shall notify the Attorney General of his determination, and the Attorney General may bring an action for damages, in any appropriate district court of the United States, to recover such costs against the person who committed the violation, any person that is owned or controlled by the person who committed the violation, and any person who owns and controls the person who committed the violation.

"(3) The total amount awarded in any case brought under paragraph (2) shall be determined by the court in light of the facts and circumstances, but shall not exceed the amount of the net loss to the national security of the United States. An action under this subsection shall be commenced not later than 3 years after the violation occurs, or one year after the violation is discovered, whichever is later.

"(l) Definition.—For purposes of this section, the term 'foreign person' means any person other than a United States person.".

These estimates shall be based on assessment by the intelligence community of any technology transfers that resulted in such serious adverse impact. TITLE III—INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL POLICY

Subtitle A—Exchange Rates and International Economic Policy Coordination

SEC. 3001. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Exchange Rates and International Economic Policy Coordination Act of 1988".

SEC. 3002. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the macroeconomic policies, including the exchange rate policies, of the leading industrialized nations require improved coordination and are not consistent with long-term economic growth and financial stability;

(2) currency values have a major role in determining the patterns of production and trade in the world economy;

(3) the rise in the value of the dollar in the early 1980's contributed substantially to our current trade deficit;

(4) exchange rates among major trading nations have become increasingly volatile and a pattern of exchange rates has at times developed which contribute to substantial and persistent imbalances in the flow of goods and services between nations, imposing serious strains on the world trading system and frustrating both business and government planning;

(5) capital flows between nations have become very large compared to trade flows, respond at times quickly and dramatically to policy and economic changes, and, for these reasons, contribute significantly to uncertainty in financial markets, the volatility of exchange rates, and the development of exchange rates which produce imbalances in the flow of goods and services between nations;

(6) policy initiatives by some major trading nations that manipulate the value of their currencies in relation to the United States dollar to gain competitive advantage continue to create serious competitive problems for United States industries;

(7) a more stable exchange rate for the dollar at a level consistent with a more appropriate and sustainable balance in the United States current account should be a major focus of national economic policy;

(8) procedures for improving the coordination of macroeconomic policy need to be strengthened considerably; and

(9) under appropriate circumstances, intervention by the United States in foreign exchange markets as part of a coordinated international strategic intervention effort could produce more orderly adjustment of foreign exchange markets and, in combination with necessary macroeconomic policy changes, assist adjustment toward a more appropriate and sustainable balance in current accounts.

SEC. 3003. STATEMENT OF POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States that—

(1) the United States and the other major industrialized countries should take steps to continue the process of coordinating monetary, fiscal, and structural policies initiated in the Plaza Agreement of September 1985;

(2) the goal of the United States in international economic negotiations should be to achieve macroeconomic policies and exchange rates consistent with more appropriate and sustainable balances in trade and capital flows and to foster price stability in conjunction with economic growth;

(3) the United States, in close coordination with the other major industrialized countries should, where appropriate, participate in international currency markets with the objective of producing more orderly adjustment of foreign exchange markets and, in combination with necessary macroeconomic policy changes, assisting adjustment toward a more appropriate and sustainable balance in current accounts; and

(4) the accountability of the President for the impact of economic policies and exchange rates on trade competitiveness should be increased.

SEC. 3004. INTERNATIONAL NEGOTIATIONS ON EXCHANGE RATE AND ECONOMIC POLICIES.

(a) MULTILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS.—The President shall seek to confer and negotiate with other countries—

(1) to achieve—

(A) better coordination of macroeconomic policies of the major industrialized nations; and

(B) more appropriate and sustainable levels of trade and current account balances, and exchange rates of the dollar and other currencies consistent with such balances; and

(2) to develop a program for improving existing mechanisms for coordination and improving the functioning of the exchange rate system to provide for long-term exchange rate stability consistent with more appropriate and sustainable current account balances.

(b) BILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall analyze on an annual basis the exchange rate policies of foreign countries, in consultation with the International Monetary Fund, and consider whether countries manipulate the rate of exchange between their currency and the United States dollar for purposes of preventing effective balance of payments adjustments or gaining unfair competitive advantage in international trade. If the Secretary considers that such manipulation is occurring with respect to countries that (1) have material global current account surpluses; and (2) have significant bilateral trade surpluses with the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury shall take action to initiate negotiations with such foreign countries on an expedited basis, in the International Monetary Fund or bilaterally, for the purpose of ensuring that such countries regularly and promptly adjust the rate of exchange between their currencies and the United States dollar to permit effective balance of payments adjustments and to eliminate the unfair advantage. The Secretary shall not be required to initiate negotiations in cases where such negotiations would have a serious detrimental impact on vital national economic and security interests; in such cases, the Secretary shall inform the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives of his determination.

SEC. 3005. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REPORTS REQUIRED.—In furtherance of the purpose of this title, the Secretary, after consultation with the Chairman of the Board, shall submit to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate, on or before October 15 of each year, a written report on international economic policy, including exchange rate policy. The Secretary shall provide a written update of developments six months after the initial report. In addition, the Secretary shall appear, if requested, before both committees to provide testimony on these reports.

(b) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—Each report submitted under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) an analysis of currency market developments and the relationship between the United States dollar and the currencies of our major trade competitors;

(2) an evaluation of the factors in the United States and other economies that underlie conditions in the currency markets, including developments in bilateral trade and capital flows;

(3) a description of currency intervention or other actions undertaken to adjust the actual exchange rate of the dollar;

(4) an assessment of the impact of the exchange rate of the United States dollar on—

(A) the ability of the United States to maintain a more appropriate and sustainable balance in its current account and merchandise trade account;

(B) production, employment, and noninflationary growth in the United States;

(C) the international competitive performance of United States industries and the external indebtedness of the United States;

(5) recommendations for any changes necessary in United States economic policy to attain a more appropriate and sustainable balance in the current account;

(6) the results of negotiations conducted pursuant to section 3004;

(7) key issues in United States policies arising from the most recent consultation requested by the International Monetary Fund under article IV of the Fund's Articles of Agreement; and

(8) a report on the size and composition of international capital flows, and the factors contributing to such flows, including, where possible, an assessment of the impact of such flows on exchange rates and trade flows.

SEC. 3006. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this subtitle:

(1) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury.

(2) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Subtitle B—International Debt

PART I—FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND STATEMENT OF POLICY

SEC. 3101. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "International Debt Management Act of 1988".

SEC. 3102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the international debt problem threatens the safety and soundness of the international financial system, the stability of the international trading system, and the economic development of the debtor countries;

(2) orderly reduction of international trade imbalances requires very substantial growth in all parts of the world economy, particularly in the developing countries;

(3) growth in developing countries with substantial external debts has been significantly constrained over the last several years by a combination of high debt service obligations and insufficient new flows of financial resources to these countries;

(4) substantial interest payment outflows from debtor countries, combined with inadequate net new capital inflows, have produced a significant net transfer of financial resources from debtor to creditor countries;

(5) negative resource transfers at present levels severely depress both investment and growth in the debtor countries, and force debtor countries to reduce imports and expand exports in order to meet their debt service obligations;

(6) current adjustment policies in debtor countries, which depress domestic demand and increase production for export, help to depress world commodity prices and limit the growth of export markets for United States industries;

(7) the United States has borne a disproportionate share of the burden of absorbing increased exports from debtor countries, while other industrialized countries have increased their imports from developing countries only slightly;

(8) current approaches to the debt problem should not rely solely on new lending as a solution to the debt problem, and should focus on other financing alternatives including a reduction in current debt service obligations;

(9) new international mechanisms to improve the management of the debt problem and to expand the range of financing options available to developing countries should be explored; and

(10) industrial countries with strong current account surpluses have a disproportionate share of the world's capital resources, and bear an additional responsibility for contributing to a viable long-term solution to the debt problem.

SEC. 3103. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this subtitle are—

(1) to expand the world trading system and raise the level of exports from the United States to the developing countries in order to reduce the United States trade deficit and foster economic expansion and an increase in the standard of living throughout the world;

(2) to alleviate the current international debt problem in order to make the debt situation of developing countries more manageable and permit the resumption of sustained growth in those countries; and

(3) to increase the stability of the world financial system and ensure the safety and soundness of United States depository institutions.

SEC. 3104. STATEMENT OF POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States that—

(1) increasing growth in the developing world is a major goal of international economic policy;

(2) it is necessary to broaden the range of options in dealing with the debt problem to include improved mechanisms to restructure existing debt;

(3) active consideration of a new multilateral authority to improve the management of the debt problem and to share the burdens of adjustment more equitably must be undertaken; and

(4) countries with strong current account surpluses bear a major responsibility for providing the financial resources needed for growth in the developing world.

PART II—THE INTERNATIONAL DEBT MANAGEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 3111. INTERNATIONAL INITIATIVE.

(a) DIRECTIVE.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall study the feasibility and advisability of establishing the International Debt Management Authority described in this section.

(2) EXPLANATION OF DETERMINATIONS.—If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that initiation of international discussions with regard to such authority would (A) result in material increase in the discount at which sovereign debt is sold, (B) materially increase the probability of default on such debt, or (C) materially enhance the likelihood of debt service failure or disruption, the Secretary shall include in his interim reports to the Congress an explanation in detail of the reasons for such determination.

(3) INITIATION OF DISCUSSIONS.—Unless such a determination is made, the Secretary of the Treasury shall initiate discussions with such industrialized and developing countries as the Secretary may determine to be appropriate with the intent to negotiate the establishment of the International Debt Management Authority, which would undertake to—

(A) purchase sovereign debt of less developed countries from private creditors at an appropriate discount;

(B) enter into negotiations with the debtor countries for the purpose of restructuring the debt in order to—

(i) ease the current debt service burden on the debtor countries; and

(ii) provide additional opportunities for economic growth in both debtor and industrialized countries; and

(C) assist the creditor banks in the voluntary disposition of their Third World loan portfolio.

(b) OBJECTIVES.—In any discussions initiated under subsection (a), the Secretary should include the following specific proposals:

(1) That any loan restructuring assistance provided by such an authority to any debtor nation should involve substantial commitments by the debtor to (A) economic policies designed to improve resource utilization and minimize capital flight, and (B) preparation of an economic management plan calculated to provide sustained economic growth and to allow the debtor to meet its restructured debt obligations.

(2) That support for such an authority should come from industrialized countries, and that greater support should be expected from countries with strong current account surpluses.

(3) That such an authority should have a clearly defined close working relationship with the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the various regional development banks.

(4) That such an authority should be designed to operate as a self-supporting entity, requiring no routine appropriation of resources from any member government, and to function subject to the prohibitions contained in the first sentence of section 3112(a).

(5) That such an authority should have a defined termination date and a clear proposal for the restoration of creditworthiness to debtor countries within this timeframe.

(c) INTERIM REPORTS.—At the end of the 6-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and at the end of the 12-month period beginning on such date of enactment, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report on the progress being made on the study or in discussions described in subsection (a) to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and shall consult with such committees after submitting each such report.

(d) Final Report.—On the conclusion of the study or of discussions described in subsection (a), the Secretary shall transmit a report containing a detailed description thereof to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, together with such recommendations for legislation which the Secretary may determine to be necessary or appropriate for the establishment of the International Debt Management Authority.

SEC. 3112. ACTIONS TO FACILITATE CREATION OF THE AUTHORITY.

(a) In General.—No funds, appropriations, contributions, callable capital, financial guarantee, or any other financial support or obligation or contingent support or obligation on the part of the United States Government may be used for the creation, operation, or support of the International Debt Management Authority specified in section 3111, without the express approval of the Congress through subsequent law, nor shall any expenses associated with such authority, either directly or indirectly, accrue to any United States person without the consent of such person. Except as restricted in the preceding sentence, the Secretary of the Treasury shall review all potential resources available to the multilateral financial institutions which could be used to support the creation of the International Debt Management Authority. In the course of this review, the Secretary shall direct—

(1) the United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund to determine the amount of, and alternative methods by which, gold stock of the Fund which, subject to action by its Board of Governors, could be pledged as collateral to obtain financing for the activities of the authority specified in section 3111; and

(2) the United States Executive Director to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to determine the amount of, and alternative methods by which, liquid assets controlled by such Bank and not currently committed to any loan program which, subject to action by its Board of Governors, could be pledged as collateral for obtaining financing for the activities of the authority specified in section 3111.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall include a report on the results of the review in the first report submitted under section 3111(c).

(b) Construction of Section.—Subsection (a) shall not be construed to affect any provision of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund or of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or any agreement entered into under either of such Agreements.

SEC. 3113. IMF-WORLD BANK REVIEW.

(a) IMF Review.—The United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund shall request the management of the International Monetary Fund to prepare a review and analysis of the debt burden of the developing countries, with particular attention to alternatives for dealing with the debt problem including new lending instruments, rescheduling and refinancing of existing debt, securitization and debt conversion techniques, discounted debt repurchases, and the International Debt Management Authority described in section 3111 no later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) World Bank Review.—The United States Executive Director to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development shall request the management of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to prepare a review and analysis of the debt burden of the developing countries, with particular attention to alternatives for dealing with the debt problem including new lending instruments, rescheduling and refinancing of existing debt, securitization and debt conversion techniques, discounted debt repurchases, and the International Debt Management Authority described in section 3111 no later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

PART III—REGULATORY PROVISIONS AFFECTING INTERNATIONAL DEBT

SEC. 3121. PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE REGULATION OF DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.

(a) Regulatory Objectives.—It is the sense of the Congress that regulations prescribed by Federal banking regulatory agencies which affect the international assets of United States commercial banks should grant the widest possible latitude to the banks for negotiating principal and interest reductions with respect to obligations of heavily indebted sovereign borrowers.

(b) Flexibility in Debt Restructuring.—It is the intent of the Congress that, in applying generally accepted accounting standards, Federal agencies which regulate and oversee the operations of depository institutions (within the meaning given to such term by clauses (i) through (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act) apply to such institutions maximum flexibility in determining the asset value of restructured loans to heavily indebted sovereign borrowers and in accounting for the effects of such restructuring prospectively.

(c) Recapitalization.—It is the intent of the Congress that Federal agencies which regulate and oversee the operations of depository institutions (within the meaning given to such term by clauses (i) through (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act) should require depository institutions with substantial amounts of loans to heavily indebted sovereign borrowers to seek, as appropriate, expanded recapitalization through equity financing to ensure that prudent institutional capital-to-total asset ratios are established and maintained.

(d) Reserves for Loan Losses.—It is the intent of the Congress that Federal agencies which regulate and oversee the operations of depository institutions (within the meaning given to such term by clauses (i) through (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act) should seek to ensure that appropriate levels of reserves be established by depository institutions engaged in substantial lending to heavily indebted sovereign borrowers in accordance with both the credit and country risks associated with such lending.

(e) Data on Banks Foreign Loan Risks.—Section 913 of the International Lending Supervision Act of 1983 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) To ensure that Congress is fully informed of the risks to our banking system posed by troubled foreign loans, the Federal banking agencies, before March 31, 1989, and on April 30 of each succeeding year, shall jointly submit to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives a report that shall include the following:

"(1) The level of loan exposure of those banking institutions under the jurisdiction of each agency which is rated 'value-impaired', 'substandard', 'other transfer risk problems', or in any other troubled debt category as may be established by the banking agencies. This tabulation shall clearly identify aggregate loan exposures of the 9 largest United States banks under the agencies' jurisdiction, the aggregate loan exposures of the next 13 largest banks, and the aggregate exposure of all other such banks which have significant country risk exposures. This tabulation shall include a separate section identifying, to the extent feasible, new bank loans to countries with debt service problems which were made within the past year preceding the date on which the report required under this subsection is due, and shall include the amount of sovereign loans written off or sold by such banks during the preceding year.

"(2) Progress that has been achieved by the appropriate Federal banking agencies and by banking institutions in reducing the risk to the economy of the United States posed by the exposure of banking institutions to troubled international loans through appropriate voluntary or regulatory policies, including increases in capital and reserves of banking institutions.

"(3) The relationship between lending activity by the United States banks and foreign banks in countries experiencing debt service difficulties and exports from the United States and other lending countries to these markets, and the extent to which United States banking institutions can be encouraged to continue to make credit available to finance necessary growth in international trade, and particularly to finance United States exports.

"(4) The response of regulatory agencies in other countries to the international debt problems, including measures which encourage the building of capital and reserves by foreign banking institutions, tax treatment of reserves, encouragement of new lending to promote international trade, and measures which may place United States banking institutions at a competitive disadvantage when compared with foreign banking institutions.

"(5) Steps that have been taken during the previous year by countries experiencing debt service difficulties to enhance conditions for private direct investment (including investment by United States persons) and to eliminate production subsidies, attain price stability, and undertake such other steps as will remove the causes of their debt service difficulties.

Each appropriate Federal banking agency may provide data in the aggregate to the extent necessary to preserve the integrity and confidentiality of the regulatory and examination process.".

SEC. 3122. STUDIES RELATING TO THE REGULATION OF DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.

(a) Regulatory Study Required.—The Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall conduct a study to determine the extent of any regulatory obstacle to negotiated reductions in the debt service obligations associated with foreign debt.

(b) Specific Factors To Be Studied.—The study required by subsection (a) shall include an analysis of regulatory and accounting obstacles to various forms of debt restructuring, including negotiated interest reduction, the amortization of loan losses, securitization and debt conversion techniques, and discounted debt repurchases, as well as an analysis of the profitability of commercial bank lending to developing countries during the 10-year period ending on December 31, 1986. The analysis should include an assessment of the impact of the various forms of debt restructuring on the development of a secondary market in developing country debt and on the safety and soundness of the United States banking system.

(c) Report Required.—Within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall transmit to the Congress a report containing the findings and conclusions of such agencies with respect to the study required under subsection (a), together with any recommendations concerning legislation which such agencies determine to be necessary or appropriate to remove regulatory obstacles to negotiated reductions in the debt service obligations associated with sovereign debt.

(a) Study Required.—

(1) In general.—The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the directors and staff of the International Monetary Fund and such other interested parties as the Secretary may determine to be appropriate, shall conduct a study of the feasibility and the efficacy of reducing the international debt of the poorest of the heavily indebted countries through a one-time allocation by the International Monetary Fund of limited purpose Special Drawing Rights to such countries in accordance with a plan which provides that—

(A) the allocation be made without regard to the quota established for any such country under the Articles of Agreement of the Fund;

(B) limited purpose Special Drawing Rights be used only to repay official debt of any such country;

(C) the allocation of limited purpose Special Drawing Rights to any such country not be treated as an allocation on which such country must pay interest to the Fund; and

(D) the use of limited purpose Special Drawing Rights by any such country to repay official debt shall be treated as an allocation of regular Special Drawing Rights to the creditor.

(2) Additional factors to be studied.—The study required under paragraph (1) shall include the following:

(A) To the extent the creation and allocation of the limited purpose Special Drawing Rights described in paragraph (1) would require an amendment of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund, an assessment of the period of time within which such amendment could be ratified by the member nations, based on discussions with the major members of the Fund.

(B) An assessment of other means for achieving the objectives of principal and interest reduction on official debt of the poorest heavily indebted countries through the use of Special Drawing Rights.

(C) A comparative evaluation of proposals of other members of the International Monetary Fund, the directors and staff of the Fund, and other interested parties.

(D) An analysis of the effect the implementation of the provisions in paragraph (1) would have on bilateral and multilateral lenders, the international monetary system, and such other provisions of this Act as may be appropriate.

(E) A comparative analysis of the available alternatives identified under subparagraph (B) or (C).

(b) Report Required.—Within 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate containing the findings and conclusions of the Secretary pursuant to the study required under subsection (a), together with—

(2) recommendations for such legislation and administrative action as the Secretary determines to be necessary and appropriate to implement such option.

(1) negotiations have led to an international agreement to increase the grant element required in tied aid credit offers;

(2) concern continues to exist that countries party to the agreement may continue to offer tied aid credits that deviate from the agreement;

(3) in such cases, the United States could continue to lose export sales in connection with the aggressive, and in some cases, unfair, tied aid practices of such countries; and

(b) Extension of Tied Aid Credit Fund.—Subsections (c)(2) and (e)(1) of section 15 of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635i-3 (c)(2) and (e)(1)) are each amended by striking out "and 1988" and inserting in lieu thereof "1988, and 1989".

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) United States companies can successfully compete in foreign markets if they are given fair access to such markets;

(2) a trade surplus in services could offset the deficit in manufactured goods and help lower the overall trade deficit significantly;

(3) in contrast to the barriers faced by United States firms in Japan, Japanese firms generally have enjoyed access to United States financial markets on the same terms as United States firms; and

(4) United States firms seeking to compete in Japan face or have faced a variety of discriminatory barriers effectively precluding such firms from fairly competing for Japanese business, including—

(A) limitations on membership on the Tokyo Stock Exchange;

(C) unequal opportunities to participate in and act as lead manager for equity and bond underwritings;

(2) Certain prior acquisitions excepted.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to the continuation of the prior designation of a company as a primary dealer in government debt instruments if—

(A) such designation occurred before July 31, 1987; and

TITLE IV—AGRICULTURAL TRADE

SEC. 4001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Agricultural Competitiveness and Trade Act of 1988".

Subtitle A—Findings, Policy, and Purpose

SEC. 4101. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) United States agricultural exports have declined by more than 36 percent since 1981, from $43,800,000,000 in 1981 to $27,900,000,000 in 1987;

(2) the United States share of the world market for agricultural commodities and products has dropped by 20 percent during the last 6 years;

(3) for the first time in 15 years, the United States incurred monthly agricultural trade deficits in 1986;

(4) the loss of $1,000,000,000 in United States agricultural exports causes the loss of 35,000 agricultural jobs and the loss of 60,000 nonagricultural jobs;

(5) the loss of agricultural exports threatens family farms and the economic well-being of rural communities in the United States;

(6) factors contributing to the loss of United States agricultural exports include changes in world agricultural markets such as—

(A) the addition of new exporting nations;

(B) innovations in agricultural technology;

(C) increased use of export subsidies designed to lower the price of commodities on the world market;

(D) the existence of barriers to agricultural trade;

(E) the slowdown in the growth of world food demand in the 1980's due to cyclical economic factors, including currency fluctuations and a debt-related slowdown in the economic growth of agricultural markets in certain developing countries; and

(F) the rapid buildup of surplus stocks as a consequence of favorable weather for agricultural production during the 1980's;

(7) increasing the volume and value of exports is important to the financial well-being of the farm sector in the United States and to increasing farm income in the United States;

(8) in order to increase agricultural exports and improve prices for farmers and ranchers in the United States, it is necessary that all agricultural export programs of the United States be used in an expeditious manner, including programs established under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.), the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714 et seq.), and section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1431);

(9) greater use should be made by the Secretary of Agriculture of the authorities established under section 4 of the Food for Peace Act of 1966 (7 U.S.C. 1707a), the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.), section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1431), and the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714 et seq.) to provide intermediate credit financing and other assistance for the establishment of facilities in importing countries to—

(A) improve the handling, marketing, processing, storage, and distribution of imported agricultural commodities and products; and

(B) increase livestock production to enhance the demand for United States feed grains;

(10) food aid and export assistance programs in developing countries stimulate economic activity which causes incomes to rise, and, as incomes rise, diets improve and the demand for and ability to purchase food increases;

(11) private voluntary organizations and cooperatives are important and successful partners in our food aid and development programs; and

(12) in addition to meeting humanitarian needs, food aid used in sales and barter programs by private voluntary organizations and cooperatives—

(A) provides communities with health care, credit systems, and tools for development; and

(B) establishes the infrastructure that is essential to the expansion of markets for United States agricultural commodities and products.

SEC. 4102. POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States—

(1) to provide, through all possible means, agricultural commodities and products for export at competitive prices, with full assurance of quality and reliability of supply;

(2) to support the principle of free trade and the promotion of fair trade in agricultural commodities and products;

(3) to support fully the negotiating objectives set forth in section 1101(b) of this Act to eliminate or reduce substantially constraints on fair and open trade in agricultural commodities and products;

(4) to use statutory authority to counter unfair foreign trade practices and to use all available means, including export promotion programs, and, if necessary, restrictions on United States imports of agricultural commodities and products, in order to encourage fair and open trade; and

(5) to provide for increased representation of United States agricultural trade interests in the formulation of national fiscal and monetary policy affecting trade.

SEC. 4103. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this title—

(1) to increase the effectiveness of the Department of Agriculture in agricultural trade policy formulation and implementation and in assisting United States agricultural producers to participate in international agricultural trade, by strengthening the operations of the Department of Agriculture; and

(1) shall submit a report to the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Finance of the Senate describing the status of the GATT negotiations concerning agricultural trade, the progress that has been made to date in the negotiations, the general areas of disagreement, the anticipated date of completion of the negotiations, and the changes in domestic farm programs that are likely to be necessary on conclusion of the negotiations; and

(2) shall certify to Congress whether or not significant progress has been made in the negotiations.

(b) MARKETING LOAN.—

(1) IMPLEMENTATION.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if the President does not certify that significant progress has been made towards reaching a GATT agreement concerning agricultural trade, the President shall, not later than 60 days before the beginning of the marketing year for the 1990 crop of wheat, instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to permit producers to repay loans made under sections 107D(a), 105C(a), and 201(i) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445b-3(a), 1444e(a), and 1446(i)) for each of the 1990 crops of wheat, feed grains, and soybeans at a level that is the lesser of—

(A) the loan level determined for each such crop; or

(B) the prevailing world market price for each such crop, as determined by the Secretary.

(2) WAIVER.—The President may waive the application of paragraph (1) by certifying to Congress that implementation of the marketing loan would harm further negotiations.

(3) DISCONTINUANCE.—If, after the implementation of a marketing loan in accordance with paragraph (1), the President certifies to Congress that substantial progress is being made in the GATT negotiations and that continuation of the marketing loan program implemented in accordance with paragraph (1) would harm such progress, the President may instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to discontinue the marketing loan program.

(c) EXPORT ENHANCEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (4), if the President exercises the authority to waive or discontinue the marketing loan program provided for in paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (b), the President shall instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to make agricultural commodities and products acquired by the Commodity Credit Corporation equaling at least $2,000,000,000 in value available during the 1990 through 1992 fiscal years to United States exporters of domestically produced agricultural commodities and products for the purpose of making exports of such commodities and products available on the world market at competitive prices.

(2) NONDISPLACEMENT.—Commodities and products made available in accordance with this subsection shall be in addition to, and not in lieu of, other commodities and products made available for the purpose of enhancing the export of United States commodities and products.

(3) USE OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION.—The Secretary of Agriculture may use the funds, facilities, and authorities of the Commodity Credit Corporation to carry out this subsection.

(4) EXCEPTION.—The President may waive the application of paragraph (1) by certifying to Congress that implementation of the export enhancement program provided for by this subsection would be a substantial impediment to achieving a successful agreement under the GATT.

(5) DISCONTINUANCE.—If, after the implementation of paragraph (1), the President certifies to Congress that substantial progress is being made in the GATT negotiations and that continuation of the export enhancement program implemented in accordance with paragraph (1) would harm such progress, the President may, not before 60 days after the consultation required under subsection (d) with respect to such certification, instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to suspend the implementation of such program.

(d) CONSULTATION.—The President may not make a certification to Congress under this section unless the United States Trade Representative—

(1) consults about the certification with—

The Secretary shall carry out this subsection using the funds, facilities, and authorities of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

(c) DISCONTINUANCE.—If the marketing loan program for the 1990 crop of soybeans is discontinued under section 4301(b)(3) of this Act, the Secretary shall discontinue the price support programs for sunflower seeds and cottonseed required by this section.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) Canadian importers of wheat or products containing a minimum of 25 percent wheat (except packaged wheat products for retail sale) from the United States must obtain import licenses from the Canadian Wheat Board;

(2) the Canadian Wheat Board requires such importers of United States wheat and wheat products to prove that the wheat or wheat products to be imported are not readily available in Canada before issuance of an import license, and therefore, for all practical purposes, such licenses are not granted by the Canadian Wheat Board;

(3) the licensing requirements of the Canadian Wheat Board's import licensing program result in a trade barrier on the importation of United States wheat and wheat products; and

(4) Canada is a member of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and, under such agreement, member countries should, in general, eliminate import licensing programs that operate as nontariff trade barriers.

(b) Study.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a study of the Canadian Wheat Board's import licensing program to—

(1) assess the effect of the Canadian Wheat Board's import licensing program referred to in subsection (a) on wheat producers, processors, and exporters in the United States; and

(B) the estimated effect of the Canadian Wheat Board's import licensing program in reducing exports of United States wheat and wheat products to Canada.

(c) Submission of Results.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit the results of the study conducted under subsection (b) to the United States Trade Representative.

(d) Consultation With Congress.—Not later than 90 days after the results of the study are submitted, the Secretary and the United States Trade Representative shall consult with the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the status of efforts to negotiate the elimination of such Canadian licensing requirements.

(b) Compilation and Report on Consumption.—The Secretary shall compile and report to the public data on the total quantity of production and consumption of domestically produced raw and processed agricultural products.

(c) Issuing of Data.—The reports required by this section shall be made in a format that correlates statistics for the quantity and value of imported agricultural products to the production and consumption of domestic agricultural products. The Secretary shall issue such reports on an annual basis, with the first report required not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4503. STUDY RELATING TO HONEY.

In conducting this study, the Secretary shall assess the likelihood of other nations' agreeing to reduce or eliminate their domestic dairy price stabilization, export subsidization, or import control programs in such multilateral negotiations.

(b) Report.—The Secretary shall submit a report describing the results of the study, together with any recommendations, to the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

(1) whether articles containing dairy products (including chocolate in blocks of at least 10 pounds and other such products) are being imported into the United States in such a manner or in such quantities as to circumvent or avoid the limitations imposed on imports of dairy products under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 624), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937; and

(2) whether products containing refined sugar are being imported into the United States in such a manner or in such quantities as to circumvent or avoid the limitations imposed on imports of refined sugar and sugar containing products imposed under Federal law.

(3) the effectiveness of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 624), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, in preventing the circumvention or avoidance of the quantitative limitations; and

(4) the use of United States foreign trade zones to circumvent the quantitative limitations.

(c) Report.—On completion of the study required by this section, the Comptroller General shall report the results of the study to the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

SEC. 4508. STUDY OF LAMB MEAT IMPORTS.

(a) Study.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a study of the market for lamb meat products in the United States, focusing on production, demand, rate of return on investment, marketing and trends with respect to the level of imports of live lamb and lamb meat products, and the effects of such imports on the production of lamb meat in the United States.

(b) Report.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report setting forth the results of such study. If appropriate, the report should include proposals on ways to bring about a long-term increase in per capita consumption of lamb meat products and ways to encourage a more profitable and productive domestic industry to ensure a plentiful and affordable supply of lamb meat.

SEC. 4509. ROSE STUDY.

(a) Study.—Not later than 240 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the United States International Trade Commission shall, pursuant to section 332 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1332), complete a study with respect to—

(1) competitive factors affecting the domestic rose-growing industry, including competition from imports;

(2) the effect that the European Community's tariff rate for imported roses has on world trade of roses; and

(3) the extent to which unfair trade practices and foreign barriers to trade are impeding the marketing abroad of domestically produced roses.

(b) Report.—The Commission shall report the results of the study conducted in accordance with subsection (a) as soon as the study is completed to—

(1) the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives;

(2) the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Finance of the Senate;

(3) the United States Trade Representative;

(4) the Secretary of Commerce; and

(5) the Secretary of Agriculture.

(c) Review.—It is the sense of Congress that the United States Trade Representative, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture, should use all available remedies, programs, and policies within their respective jurisdictions to assist the domestic rose industry to maintain and enhance its ability to compete in the domestic and world market for roses if, after their review of the study and report required by this section, such officials determine that such action is appropriate to counter any adverse effects on the domestic rose industry caused by unfair trade practices of foreign competitors.

Subtitle F—Miscellaneous Agricultural Provisions

SEC. 4601. ALLOCATION OF CERTAIN MILK.

Section 8c(5) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608c(5)), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(K)(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, milk produced by dairies—

"(I) owned or controlled by foreign persons; and

"(II) financed by or with the use of bonds the interest on which is exempt from Federal income tax under section 103 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; shall be treated as other-source milk, and shall be allocated as milk received from producer-handlers for the purposes of classifying producer milk, under the milk marketing program established under this Act. For the purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'foreign person' has the meaning given such term under section 9(3) of the Agricultural Foreign Investment Disclosure Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. 3508(3)).

"(ii) The Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe regulations to carry out this subparagraph.

"(iii) This subparagraph shall not apply with respect to any dairy that began operation before May 6, 1986.".

SEC. 4602. PAID ADVERTISING FOR FLORIDA-GROWN STRAWBERRIES UNDER MARKETING ORDERS.

The firstproviso of section 8c(6)(I) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608c(6)(I)), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended by striking out "or tomatoes" and inserting in lieu thereof "tomatoes, or Florida-grown strawberries,".

SEC. 4603. APPLICATION OF MARKETING ORDERS TO IMPORTS.

Section 8e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608e-1), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" at the beginning of the first sentence; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) The Secretary may provide for a period of time (not to exceed 35 days) in addition to the period of time covered by a marketing order during which the marketing order requirements would be in effect for a particular commodity during any year if the Secretary determines that such additional period of time is necessary—

"(A) to effectuate the purposes of this Act; and

"(B) to prevent the circumvention of the grade, size, quality, or maturity standards of a seasonal marketing order applicable to a commodity produced in the United States by imports of such commodity.

"(2) In making the determination required by paragraph (1), the Secretary, through notice and comment procedures, shall consider—

"(A) to what extent, during the previous year, imports of a commodity that did not meet the requirements of a marketing order applicable to such commodity were marketed in the United States during the period that such marketing order requirements were in effect for available domestic commodities (or would have been marketed during such time if not for any additional period established by the Secretary);

"(B) if the importation into the United States of such commodity did, or was likely to, circumvent the grade, size, quality or maturity standards of a seasonal marketing order applicable to such commodity produced in the United States; and

"(C) the availability and price of commodities of the variety covered by the marketing order during any additional period the marketing order requirements are to be in effect.

"(3) An additional period established by the Secretary in accordance with this subsection shall be—

"(A) announced not later than 30 days before the date such additional period is to be in effect; and

"(B) reviewed by the Secretary on request, through notice and comment procedures, at least every 3 years in order to determine if the additional period is still needed to prevent circumvention of the seasonal marketing order by imported commodities.

"(4) For the purposes of carrying out this subsection, the Secretary is authorized to make such reasonable inspections as may be necessary.".

SEC. 4604. RECIPROCAL MEAT INSPECTION REQUIREMENT.

(a) In General.—Section 20 of the Federal Meat Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 620) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) As used in this subsection:

"(A) The term 'meat articles' means carcasses, meat and meat food products of cattle, sheep, swine, goats, horses, mules, or other equines, that are capable of use as human food.

"(B) The term 'standards' means inspection, building construction, sanitary, quality, species verification, residue, and other standards that are applicable to meat articles.

"(2) On request of the Committee on Agriculture or the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry or the Committee on Finance of the Senate, or at the initiative of the Secretary, the Secretary shall, as soon as practicable, determine whether a particular foreign country applies standards for the importation of meat articles from the United States that are not related to public health concerns about end-product quality that can be substantiated by reliable analytical methods.

"(3) If the Secretary determines that a foreign country applies standards described in paragraph (2)—

"(A) the Secretary shall consult with the United States Trade Representative; and

"(B) within 30 days after the determination of the Secretary under paragraph (2), the Secretary and the United States Trade Representative shall recommend to the President whether action should be taken under paragraph (4).

"(4) Within 30 days after receiving a recommendation for action under paragraph (3), the President shall, if and for such time as the President considers appropriate, prohibit imports into the United States of any meat articles produced in such foreign country unless it is determined that the meat articles produced in that country meet the standards applicable to meat articles in commerce within the United States.

"(5) The action authorized under paragraph (4) may be used instead of, or in addition to, any other action taken under any other law.".

(b) Reports.—Section 20(e) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (4);

SEC. 4605. STUDY OF INTERNATIONAL MARKETING IN LAND GRANT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) land grant colleges and universities (as defined in section 1404(10) of the National Agricultural Research, Extension, and Teaching Policy Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 3103(10)) should encourage the study and career objective of international marketing of agricultural commodities and products;

(2) because marketing complements production, international agricultural marketing specialists are needed in a globally competitive world; and

(3) enhanced foreign marketing of United States agricultural commodities and products will help relieve stress in the rural economy.

SEC. 4606. INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN EGGS AND EGG PRODUCTS.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) the system of basic and variable levies of the European Community has severely restricted the export of United States eggs and egg products to European Community member countries;

(2) export subsidies of the European Community have caused displacement of United States egg exports in international markets; and

(3) the Secretary of Agriculture is in the process of certifying the Netherland's inspection procedures for egg products for the purpose of importation into the United States of egg products of the Netherlands.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of Congress that the United States Trade Representative should enter into negotiations with the European Community concerning—

(1) duties, tariffs, and other means used by the European Community to limit the access of United States eggs and egg products to European Community markets; and

(2) European Community export subsidies that have had the effect of excluding United States eggs and egg products from other world markets.

SEC. 4607. UNITED STATES ACCESS TO THE KOREAN BEEF MARKET.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) the 1986 United States trade deficit with the Republic of Korea was $7,600,000,000;

(2) the Republic of Korea has banned beef imports since May 1985;

(3) this beef import ban is in contravention of Korea's obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and impairs United States rights under such agreement;

(4) Korea imposes an unreasonably high 20 percent ad valorem tariff on meat products; and

(5) if the Korean beef market were liberalized, the United States, due to comparative advantage, could supply a significant portion of the Korean market for beef, thereby increasing profit opportunities for the United States beef industry while benefiting Korean consumers.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Republic of Korea should take immediate action to fulfill its obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and permit access to its market for United States beef;

(2) the United States should aggressively pursue negotiations to gain access to the Korean market for United States beef;

(3) such negotiations, in addition to elimination of the beef import ban, should address the high tariffs set by the Republic of Korea and the means by which imported beef is distributed in Korea; and

(4) if the Republic of Korea does not show clear evidence that it is engaging in meaningful liberalization of its market for United States beef, the United States should use all available and appropriate means to encourage the Republic of Korea to open its market to United States beef imports.

SEC. 4608. UNITED STATES ACCESS TO JAPANESE AGRICULTURAL MARKETS.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) the United States requested establishment of a panel pursuant to Article XXIII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (hereinafter in this section referred to as "GATT") to examine Japanese import restrictions on 12 categories of agricultural products;

(2) the GATT panel found that Japanese quantitative restrictions on 10 of the 12 product categories are inconsistent with Article XI of the GATT and recommended that Japan eliminate them or otherwise take action to bring them into conformity with the GATT; and

(3) the rationale behind the GATT panel finding can also be applied to other restrictions that Japan maintains on imports from the United States, including—

(A) a virtual ban on imports of United States rice;

(B) a very restrictive quota on imports of United States beef; and

(C) high tariffs and restrictive quotas on imports of United States citrus.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Government of Japan should immediately take actions to comply with the findings of the GATT panel report;

(2) the Government of Japan should immediately liberalize its trade policies by lowering high tariffs and removing quotas on agricultural imports from the United States, including those imposed on rice, beef, and citrus, in order to avoid any damage to the close relations between Japan and the United States; and

(3) the United States should continue efforts to persuade the Government of Japan to remove its trade barriers.

SEC. 4609. SENSE OF CONGRESS RELATING TO SECTION 22.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the amounts of assessments collected under the no-net-cost tobacco program can be an indicator of import injury and material interference with the tobacco price support program administered by the Secretary of Agriculture; and

(2) for purposes of any investigation conducted under section 22(a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 624(a)), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, with respect to tobacco, or articles containing tobacco, imported into the United States, the International Trade Commission should take into account, as if they are costs to the Federal government, contributions and assessments imposed under sections 106A and 106B of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445-1 and 1445-2) in determining whether such imported tobacco or articles containing tobacco materially interfere with the tobacco price support program carried out by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(b) CORRECTION OF INTERNAL REFERENCES.—Sections 1 through 7 of that portion of such joint resolution are each amended by striking out "chapter" each place it appears and inserting "Act" in lieu thereof.

(1) Not later than 480 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall place in effect computerized data management systems for the Food and Drug Administration under which the Administration will—

(A) record, summarize, and evaluate the results of its program for monitoring food products for pesticide residues,

(B) identify gaps in its pesticide monitoring program in the monitoring of (i) pesticides, (ii) food products, and (iii) food from specific countries and from domestic sources,

(C) detect trends in the presence of pesticide residues in food products and identify public health problems emerging from the occurrence of pesticide residues in food products,

(D) focus its testing resources for monitoring pesticide residues in food on detecting those residues which pose a public health concern,

(E) prepare summaries of the information listed in subsection (b), and

(F) provide information to assist the Environmental Protection Agency in carrying out its responsibilities under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act and the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

(2) As soon as practicable, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall develop a means to enable the computerized data management systems placed into effect under paragraph (1) to make the summary described in subsection (c).

(3)(A) Paragraph (1) does not limit the authority of the Food and Drug Administration to—

(i) use the computerized data management systems placed in effect under paragraph (1), or

(ii) develop additional data management systems, to facilitate the regulation of any substance or product covered under the requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

(B) In placing into effect the computerized data management systems under paragraph (1) and in carrying out paragraph (2), the Secretary shall comply with applicable regulations governing computer system design and procurement.

(b) INFORMATION.—The Food and Drug Administration shall use the computerized data management systems placed into effect under subsection (a)(1) to prepare a summary of—

(1) information on—

(A) the types of imported and domestically produced food products analyzed for compliance with the requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act regarding the presence of pesticide residues,

(B) the number of samples of each such food product analyzed for such compliance by country of origin,

(C) the pesticide residues which may be detected using the testing methods employed,

(D) the pesticide residues in such food detected and the levels detected,

(E) the compliance status of each sample of such food tested and the violation rate for each country-product combination, and

(F) the action taken with respect to each sample of such food found to be in violation of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and its ultimate disposition, and

(2) information on—

(A) the country of origin of each imported food product referred to in paragraph (1)(A), and

(B) the United States district of entry for each such imported food product.

(c) VOLUME DATA.—The Food and Drug Administration shall use the computerized data management systems placed into effect under subsection (a)(1) to summarize the volume of each type of food product subject to the requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act which is imported into the United States and which has an entry value which exceeds an amount established by the Secretary of Health and Human Services. The summary shall be made by country of origin and district of entry. Information with respect to volumes of food products to be included in the summary shall, to the extent feasible, be obtained from data bases of other Federal agencies.

(d) COMPILATION.—Not later than 90 days after the expiration of 1 year after the data management systems are placed into effect under subsection (a) and annually thereafter, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall compile a summary of the information described in subsection (b) with respect to the previous year. When the Food and Drug Administration is able to make summaries under subsection (c), the Secretary shall include in the compilation under the preceding sentence a compilation of the information described in subsection (c). Compilations under this subsection shall be made available to Federal and State agencies and other interested persons.

SEC. 4703. FOREIGN PESTICIDE INFORMATION.

(a) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into cooperative agreements with the governments of the countries which are the major sources of food imports into the United States subject to pesticide residue monitoring by the Food and Drug Administration for the purpose of improving the ability of the Food and Drug Administration to assure compliance with the pesticide tolerance requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act with regard to imported food.

(b) INFORMATION ACTIVITIES.—

(1) The cooperative agreements entered into under subsection (a) with governments of foreign countries shall specify the action to be taken by the parties to the agreements to accomplish the purpose described in subsection (a), including the means by which the governments of the foreign countries will provide to the Secretary of Health and Human Services current information identifying each of the pesticides used in the production, transportation, and storage of food products imported from production regions of such countries into the United States.

(2) In the case of a foreign country with which the Secretary is unable to enter into an agreement under subsection (a) or for which the information provided under paragraph (1) is insufficient to assure an effective pesticide monitoring program, the Secretary shall, to the extent practicable, obtain the information described in paragraph (1) with respect to such country from other Federal or international agencies or private sources.

(3) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall assure that appropriate offices of the Food and Drug Administration which are engaged in the monitoring of imported food for pesticide residues receive the information obtained under paragraph (1) or (2).

(4) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall make available any information obtained under paragraph (1) or (2) to State agencies engaged in the monitoring of imported food for pesticide residues other than information obtained from private sources the disclosure of which to such agencies is restricted.

(c) COORDINATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall—

(1) notify in writing the Department of Agriculture, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Department of State at the initiation of negotiations with a foreign country to develop a cooperative agreement under subsection (a); and

(2) coordinate the activities of the Department of Health and Human Services with the activities of those departments and agencies, as appropriate, during the course of such negotiations.

(d) Report.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the activities undertaken by the Secretary to implement this section. The report shall be made available to appropriate Federal and State agencies and to interested persons.

SEC. 4704. PESTICIDE ANALYTICAL METHODS.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency—

(1) develop a detailed long-range plan and timetable for research that is necessary for the development of and validation of—

(A) new and improved analytical methods capable of detecting at one time the presence of multiple pesticide residues in food, and

(B) rapid pesticide analytical methods, and

(2) conduct a review to determine whether the use of rapid pesticide analytical methods by the Secretary would enable the Secretary to improve the cost-effectiveness of monitoring and enforcement activities under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, including increasing the number of pesticide residues which can be detected and the number of tests for pesticide residues which can be conducted in a cost-effective manner.

The Secretary shall report the plan developed under paragraph (1), the resources necessary to carry out the research described in such paragraph, recommendations for the implementation of such research, and the result of the review conducted under paragraph (2) not later than the expiration of 240 days after the date of the enactment of this Act to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

TITLE V—FOREIGN CORRUPT PRACTICES AMENDMENTS; INVESTMENT; AND TECHNOLOGY

Subtitle A—Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Amendments; Review of Certain Acquisitions

PART I—FOREIGN CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 5001. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Amendments of 1988".

SEC. 5002. PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS OF ACCOUNTING STANDARDS.

Section 13(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) No criminal liability shall be imposed for failing to comply with the requirements of paragraph (2) of this subsection except as provided in paragraph (5) of this subsection.

"(5) No person shall knowingly circumvent or knowingly fail to implement a system of internal accounting controls or knowingly falsify any book, record, or account described in paragraph (2).

"(6) Where an issuer which has a class of securities registered pursuant to section 12 of this title or an issuer which is required to file reports pursuant to section 15(d) of this title holds 50 per centum or less of the voting power with respect to a domestic or foreign firm, the provisions of paragraph (2) require only that the issuer proceed in good faith to use its influence, to the extent reasonable under the issuer's circumstances, to cause such domestic or foreign firm to devise and maintain a system of internal accounting controls consistent with paragraph (2). Such circumstances include the relative degree of the issuer's ownership of the domestic or foreign firm and the laws and practices governing the business operations of the country in which such firm is located. An issuer which demonstrates good faith efforts to use such influence shall be conclusively presumed to have complied with the requirements of paragraph (2).

"(7) For the purpose of paragraph (2) of this subsection, the terms 'reasonable assurances' and 'reasonable detail' mean such level of detail and degree of assurance as would satisfy prudent officials in the conduct of their own affairs.".

SEC. 5003. FOREIGN CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT AMENDMENTS.

(a) Prohibited Trade Practices by Issuers.—Section 30A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78dd-1) is amended to read as follows:

"PROHIBITED FOREIGN TRADE PRACTICES BY ISSUERS

"Sec. 30A. (a) Prohibition.—It shall be unlawful for any issuer which has a class of securities registered pursuant to section 12 of this title or which is required to file reports under section 15(d) of this title, or for any officer, director, employee, or agent of such issuer or any stockholder thereof acting on behalf of such issuer, to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce corruptly in furtherance of an offer, payment, promise to pay, or authorization of the payment of any money, or offer, gift, promise to give, or authorization of the giving of anything of value to—

"(1) any foreign official for purposes of—

"(A)(i) influencing any act or decision of such foreign official in his official capacity, or (ii) inducing such foreign official to do or omit to do any act in violation of the lawful duty of such official, or

"(B) inducing such foreign official to use his influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality, in order to assist such issuer in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person;

"(2) any foreign political party or official thereof or any candidate for foreign political office for purposes of—

"(A)(i) influencing any act or decision of such party, official, or candidate in its or his official capacity, or (ii) inducing such party, official, or candidate to do or omit to do an act in violation of the lawful duty of such party, official, or candidate,

"(B) inducing such party, official, or candidate to use its or his influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality,

in order to assist such issuer in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person; or

"(3) any person, while knowing that all or a portion of such money or thing of value will be offered, given, or promised, directly or indirectly, to any foreign official, to any foreign political party or official thereof, or to any candidate for foreign political office, for purposes of—

"(A)(i) influencing any act or decision of such foreign official, political party, party official, or candidate in his or its official capacity, or (ii) inducing such foreign official, political party, party official, or candidate to do or omit to do any act in violation of the lawful duty of such foreign official, political party, party official, or candidate, or

"(B) inducing such foreign official, political party, party official, or candidate to use his or its influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality, in order to assist such issuer in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person.

"(b) Exception for Routine Governmental Action.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any facilitating or expediting payment to a foreign official, political party, or party official the purpose of which is to expedite or to secure the performance of a routine governmental action by a foreign official, political party, or party official.

"(c) Affirmative Defenses.—It shall be an affirmative defense to actions under subsection (a) that—

"(1) the payment, gift, offer, or promise of anything of value that was made, was lawful under the written laws and regulations of the foreign official's, political party's, party official's, or candidate's country; or

"(2) the payment, gift, offer, or promise of anything of value that was made, was a reasonable and bona fide expenditure, such as travel and lodging expenses, incurred by or on behalf of a foreign official, party, party official, or candidate and was directly related to—

"(A) the promotion, demonstration, or explanation of products or services; or

"(B) the execution or performance of a contract with a foreign government or agency thereof.

"(d) Guidelines by the Attorney General.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Amendments of 1988, the Attorney General, after consultation with the Commission, the Secretary of Commerce, the United States Trade Representative, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury, and after obtaining the views of all interested persons through public notice and comment procedures, shall determine to what extent compliance with this section would be enhanced and the business community would be assisted by further clarification of the preceding provisions of this section and may, based on such determination and to the extent necessary and appropriate, issue—

"(1) guidelines describing specific types of conduct, associated with common types of export sales arrangements and business contracts, which for purposes of the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy, the Attorney General determines would be in conformance with the preceding provisions of this section; and

"(2) general precautionary procedures which issuers may use on a voluntary basis to conform their conduct to the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy regarding the preceding provisions of this section.

The Attorney General shall issue the guidelines and procedures referred to in the preceding sentence in accordance with the provisions of subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, and those guidelines and procedures shall be subject to the provisions of chapter 7 of that title.

"(e) Opinions of the Attorney General.—(1) The Attorney General, after consultation with appropriate departments and agencies of the United States and after obtaining the views of all interested persons through public notice and comment procedures, shall establish a procedure to provide responses to specific inquiries by issuers concerning conformance of their conduct with the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy regarding the preceding provisions of this section. The Attorney General shall, within 30 days after receiving such a request, issue an opinion in response to that request. The opinion shall state whether or not certain specified prospective conduct would, for purposes of the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy, violate the preceding provisions of this section. Additional requests for opinions may be filed with the Attorney General regarding other specified prospective conduct that is beyond the scope of conduct specified in previous requests. In any action brought under the applicable provisions of this section, there shall be a rebuttable presumption that conduct, which is specified in a request by an issuer and for which the Attorney General has issued an opinion that such conduct is in conformity with the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy, is in compliance with the preceding provisions of this section. Such a presumption may be rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence. In considering the presumption for purposes of this paragraph, a court shall weigh all relevant factors, including but not limited to whether the information submitted to the Attorney General was accurate and complete and whether it was within the scope of the conduct specified in any request received by the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall establish the procedure required by this paragraph in accordance with the provisions of subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, and that procedure shall be subject to the provisions of chapter 7 of that title.

"(2) Any document or other material which is provided to, received by, or prepared in the Department of Justice or any other department or agency of the United States in connection with a request by an issuer under the procedure established under paragraph (1), shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, and shall not, except with the consent of the issuer, be made publicly available, regardless of whether the Attorney General responds to such a request or the issuer withdraws such request before receiving a response.

"(3) Any issuer who has made a request to the Attorney General under paragraph (1) may withdraw such request prior to the time the Attorney General issues an opinion in response to such request. Any request so withdrawn shall have no force or effect.

"(4) The Attorney General shall, to the maximum extent practicable, provide timely guidance concerning the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy with respect to the preceding provisions of this section to potential exporters and small businesses that are unable to obtain specialized counsel on issues pertaining to such provisions. Such guidance shall be limited to responses to requests under paragraph (1) concerning conformity of specified prospective conduct with the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy regarding the preceding provisions of this section and general explanations of compliance responsibilities and of potential liabilities under the preceding provisions of this section.

"(f) Definitions.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) The term 'foreign official' means any officer or employee of a foreign government or any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof, or any person acting in an official capacity for or on behalf of any such government or department, agency, or instrumentality.

"(2)(A) A person's state of mind is 'knowing' with respect to conduct, a circumstance, or a result if—

"(i) such person is aware that such person is engaging in such conduct, that such circumstance exists, or that such result is substantially certain to occur; or

"(d) Injunctive Relief.—(1) When it appears to the Attorney General that any domestic concern to which this section applies, or officer, director, employee, agent, or stockholder thereof, is engaged, or about to engage, in any act or practice constituting a violation of subsection (a) of this section, the Attorney General may, in his discretion, bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States to enjoin such act or practice, and upon a proper showing, a permanent injunction or a temporary restraining order shall be granted without bond.

"(2) For the purpose of any civil investigation which, in the opinion of the Attorney General, is necessary and proper to enforce this section, the Attorney General or his designee are empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, or other documents which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to such investigation. The attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States, or any territory, possession, or commonwealth of the United States, at any designated place of hearing.

"(3) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, or other documents. Any such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or his designee, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district in which such person resides or may be found. The Attorney General may make such rules relating to civil investigations as may be necessary or appropriate to implement the provisions of this subsection.

"(e) Guidelines by the Attorney General.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Amendments of 1988, the Attorney General, after consultation with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Secretary of Commerce, the United States Trade Representative, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury, and after obtaining the views of all interested persons through public notice and comment procedures, shall determine to what extent compliance with this section would be enhanced and the business community would be assisted by further clarification of the preceding provisions of this section and may, based on such determination and to the extent necessary and appropriate, issue—

"(1) guidelines describing specific types of conduct, associated with common types of export sales arrangements and business contracts, which for purposes of the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy, the Attorney General determines would be in conformance with the preceding provisions of this section; and

"(2) general precautionary procedures which domestic concerns may use on a voluntary basis to conform their conduct to the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy regarding the preceding provisions of this section.

The Attorney General shall issue the guidelines and procedures referred to in the preceding sentence in accordance with the provisions of subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, and those guidelines and procedures shall be subject to the provisions of chapter 7 of that title.

"(f) Opinions of the Attorney General.—(1) The Attorney General, after consultation with appropriate departments and agencies of the United States and after obtaining the views of all interested persons through public notice and comment procedures, shall establish a procedure to provide responses to specific inquiries by domestic concerns concerning conformance of their conduct with the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy regarding the preceding provisions of this section. The Attorney General shall, within 30 days after receiving such a request, issue an opinion in response to that request. The opinion shall state whether or not certain specified prospective conduct would, for purposes of the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy, violate the preceding provisions of this section. Additional requests for opinions may be filed with the Attorney General regarding other specified prospective conduct that is beyond the scope of conduct specified in previous requests. In any action brought under the applicable provisions of this section, there shall be a rebuttable presumption that conduct, which is specified in a request by a domestic concern and for which the Attorney General has issued an opinion that such conduct is in conformity with the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy, is in compliance with the preceding provisions of this section. Such a presumption may be rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence. In considering the presumption for purposes of this paragraph, a court shall weigh all relevant factors, including but not limited to whether the information submitted to the Attorney General was accurate and complete and whether it was within the scope of the conduct specified in any request received by the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall establish the procedure required by this paragraph in accordance with the provisions of subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, and that procedure shall be subject to the provisions of chapter 7 of that title.

"(2) Any document or other material which is provided to, received by, or prepared in the Department of Justice or any other department or agency of the United States in connection with a request by a domestic concern under the procedure established under paragraph (1), shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, and shall not, except with the consent of the domestic concern, be made publicly available, regardless of whether the Attorney General responds to such a request or the domestic concern withdraws such request before receiving a response.

"(3) Any domestic concern who has made a request to the Attorney General under paragraph (1) may withdraw such request prior to the time the Attorney General issues an opinion in response to such request. Any request so withdrawn shall have no force or effect.

"(4) The Attorney General shall, to the maximum extent practicable, provide timely guidance concerning the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy with respect to the preceding provisions of this section to potential exporters and small businesses that are unable to obtain specialized counsel on issues pertaining to such provisions. Such guidance shall be limited to responses to requests under paragraph (1) concerning conformity of specified prospective conduct with the Department of Justice's present enforcement policy regarding the preceding provisions of this section and general explanations of compliance responsibilities and of potential liabilities under the preceding provisions of this section.

"(g) Penalties.—(1)(A) Any domestic concern that violates subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $2,000,000.

"(B) Any domestic concern that violates subsection (a) shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 imposed in an action brought by the Attorney General.

"(2)(A) Any officer or director of a domestic concern, or stockholder acting on behalf of such domestic concern, who willfully violates subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $100,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(B) Any employee or agent of a domestic concern who is a United States citizen, national, or resident or is otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the United States (other than an officer, director, or stockholder acting on behalf of such domestic concern), and who willfully violates subsection (a), shall be fined not more than $100,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(C) Any officer, director, employee, or agent of a domestic concern, or stockholder acting on behalf of such domestic concern, who violates subsection (a) shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 imposed in an action brought by the Attorney General.

"(3) Whenever a fine is imposed under paragraph (2) upon any officer, director, employee, agent, or stockholder of a domestic concern, such fine may not be paid, directly or indirectly, by such domestic concern.

"AUTHORITY TO REVIEW CERTAIN MERGERS, ACQUISITIONS, AND TAKEOVERS

"SEC. 721. (a) INVESTIGATIONS.—The President or the President's designee may make an investigation to determine the effects on national security of mergers, acquisitions, and takeovers proposed or pending on or after the date of enactment of this section by or with foreign persons which could result in foreign control of persons engaged in interstate commerce in the United States. If it is determined that an investigation should be undertaken, it shall commence no later than 30 days after receipt by the President or the President's designee of written notification of the proposed or pending merger, acquisition, or takeover as prescribed by regulations promulgated pursuant to this section. Such investigation shall be completed no later than 45 days after such determination.

"(b) CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION.—Any information or documentary material filed with the President or the President's designee pursuant to this section shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, and no such information or documentary material may be made public, except as may be relevant to any administrative or judicial action or proceeding. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent disclosure to either House of Congress or to any duly authorized committee or subcommittee of the Congress.

"(c) ACTION BY THE PRESIDENT.—Subject to subsection (d), the President may take such action for such time as the President considers appropriate to suspend or prohibit any acquisition, merger, or takeover, of a person engaged in interstate commerce in the United States proposed or pending on or after the date of enactment of this section by or with foreign persons so that such control will not threaten to impair the national security. The President shall announce the decision to take action pursuant to this subsection not later than 15 days after the investigation described in subsection (a) is completed. "FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

"SECTION 1. (a) The Congress finds and declares the following:

"(1) The future well-being of the United States economy depends on a strong manufacturing base and requires continual improvements in manufacturing technology, quality control, and techniques for ensuring product reliability and cost-effectiveness.

"(2) Precise measurements, calibrations, and standards help United States industry and manufacturing concerns compete strongly in world markets.

"(3) Improvements in manufacturing and product technology depend on fundamental scientific and engineering research to develop (A) the precise and accurate measurement methods and measurement standards needed to improve quality and reliability, and (B) new technological processes by which such improved methods may be used in practice to improve manufacturing and to assist industry to transfer important laboratory discoveries into commercial products.

"(4) Scientific progress, public safety, and product compatibility and standardization also depend on the development of precise measurement methods, standards, and related basic technologies.

"(5) The National Bureau of Standards since its establishment has served as the Federal focal point in developing basic measurement standards and related technologies, has taken a lead role in stimulating cooperative work among private industrial organizations in efforts to surmount technological hurdles, and otherwise has been responsible for assisting in the improvement of industrial technology.

"(6) The Federal Government should maintain a national science, engineering, and technology laboratory which provides measurement methods, standards, and associated technologies and which aids United States companies in using new technologies to improve products and manufacturing processes.

"(7) Such national laboratory also should serve industry, trade associations, State technology programs, labor organizations, professional societies, and educational institutions by disseminating information on new basic technologies including automated manufacturing processes.

"(b) It is the purpose of this Act—

"(1) to rename the National Bureau of Standards as the National Institute of Standards and Technology and to modernize and restructure that agency to augment its unique ability to enhance the competitiveness of American industry while maintaining its traditional function as lead national laboratory for providing the measurements, calibrations, and quality assurance techniques which underpin United States commerce, technological progress, improved product reliability and manufacturing processes, and public safety;

"(2) to assist private sector initiatives to capitalize on advanced technology;

"(3) to advance, through cooperative efforts among industries, universities, and government laboratories, promising research and development projects, which can be optimized by the private sector for commercial and industrial applications; and

"(4) to promote shared risks, accelerated development, and pooling of skills which will be necessary to strengthen America's manufacturing industries.".

"REGIONAL CENTERS FOR THE TRANSFER OF MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY

"SEC. 25. (a) The Secretary, through the Director and, if appropriate, through other officials, shall provide assistance for the creation and support of Regional Centers for the Transfer of Manufacturing Technology (hereafter in this Act referred to as the 'Centers'). Such centers shall be affiliated with any United States-based nonprofit institution or organization, or group thereof, that applies for and is awarded financial assistance under this section in accordance with the description published by the Secretary in the Federal Register under subsection (c)(2). Individual awards shall be decided on the basis of merit review. The objective of the Centers is to enhance productivity and technological performance in United States manufacturing through—

"(1) the transfer of manufacturing technology and techniques developed at the Institute to Centers and, through them, to manufacturing companies throughout the United States;

"(2) the participation of individuals from industry, universities, State governments, other Federal agencies, and, when appropriate, the Institute in cooperative technology transfer activities;

"(3) efforts to make new manufacturing technology and processes usable by United States-based small- and medium-sized companies;

"(4) the active dissemination of scientific, engineering, technical, and management information about manufacturing to industrial firms, including small- and medium-sized manufacturing companies; and

"(5) the utilization, when appropriate, of the expertise and capability that exists in Federal laboratories other than the Institute.

"(b) The activities of the Centers shall include—

"(1) the establishment of automated manufacturing systems and other advanced production technologies, based on research by the Institute, for the purpose of demonstrations and technology transfer;

"(2) the active transfer and dissemination of research findings and Center expertise to a wide range of companies and enterprises, particularly small- and medium-sized manufacturers; and

"(3) loans, on a selective, short-term basis, of items of advanced manufacturing equipment to small manufacturing firms with less than 100 employees.

"(c)(1) The Secretary may provide financial support to any Center created under subsection (a) for a period not to exceed six years. The Secretary may not provide to a Center more than 50 percent of the capital and annual operating and maintenance funds required to create and maintain such Center.

"(2) The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register, within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this section, a draft description of a program for establishing Centers, including—

"(A) a description of the program;

"(B) procedures to be followed by applicants;

"(C) criteria for determining qualified applicants;

"(D) criteria, including those listed under paragraph (4), for choosing recipients of financial assistance under this section from among the qualified applicants; and

"(E) maximum support levels expected to be available to Centers under the program in the fourth through sixth years of assistance under this section.

The Secretary shall publish a final description under this paragraph after the expiration of a 30-day comment period.

"(3) Any nonprofit institution, or group thereof, or consortia of nonprofit institutions, including entities existing on the date of the enactment of this section, may submit to the Secretary an application for financial support under this subsection, in accordance with the procedures established by the Secretary and published in the Federal Register under paragraph (2). In order to receive assistance under this section, an applicant shall provide adequate assurances that it will contribute 50 percent or more of the proposed Center's capital and annual operating and maintenance costs for the first three years and an increasing share for each of the last three years. Each applicant shall also submit a proposal for the allocation of the legal rights associated with any invention which may result from the proposed Center's activities.

"(4) The Secretary shall subject each such application to merit review. In making a decision whether to approve such application and provide financial support under this subsection, the Secretary shall consider at a minimum (A) the merits of the application, particularly those portions of the application regarding technology transfer, training and education, and adaptation of manufacturing technologies to the needs of particular industrial sectors, (B) the quality of service to be provided, (C) geographical diversity and extent of service area, and (D) the percentage of funding and amount of in-kind commitment from other sources.

"(5) Each Center which receives financial assistance under this section shall be evaluated during its third year of operation by an evaluation panel appointed by the Secretary. Each such evaluation panel shall be composed of private experts, none of whom shall be connected with the involved Center, and Federal officials. An official of the Institute shall chair the panel. Each evaluation panel shall measure the involved Center's performance against the objectives specified in this section. The Secretary shall not provide funding for the fourth through the sixth years of such Center's operation unless the evaluation is positive. If the evaluation is positive, the Secretary may provide continued funding through the sixth year at declining levels, which are designed to ensure that the Center no longer needs financial support from the Institute by the seventh year. In no event shall funding for a Center be provided by the Department of Commerce after the sixth year of the operation of a Center.

"(6) The provisions of chapter 18 of title 35, United States Code, shall (to the extent not inconsistent with this section) apply to the promotion of technology from research by Centers under this section.

"(4) assuring that the advice of the Committee established under section 10 is considered routinely in carrying out the responsibilities of the Institute; and

"(5) providing for appropriate dissemination of Program research results.

"(d) When entering into contracts or making awards under subsection (b), the following shall apply:

"(2) In the case of joint ventures, the Program shall not make an award unless, in the judgment of the Secretary, acting through the Director, Federal aid is needed if the industry in question is to form a joint venture quickly.

"(3) No Federal contract or cooperative agreement under subsection (b)(2) shall exceed $2,000,000 over 3 years, or be for more than 3 years unless a full and complete explanation of such proposed award, including reasons for exceeding these limits, is submitted in writing by the Secretary to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology of the House of Representatives. The proposed contract or cooperative agreement may be executed only after 30 calendar days on which both Houses of Congress are in session have elapsed since such submission. Federal funds made available under subsection (b)(2) shall be used only for direct costs and not for indirect costs, profits, or management fees of the contractor.

"(4) In determining whether to make an award to a particular joint venture, the Program shall consider whether the members of the joint venture have made provisions for the appropriate participation of small United States businesses in such joint venture.

"(5) Section 552 of title 5, United States Code, shall not apply to the following information obtained by the Federal Government on a confidential basis in connection with the activities of any business or any joint venture receiving funding under the Program—

"(9) Upon dissolution of any joint venture or at the time otherwise agreed upon, the Federal Government shall be entitled to a share of the residual assets of the joint venture proportional to the Federal share of the costs of the joint venture as determined by independent audit.

"(e) As used in this section, the term 'joint research and development venture' has the meaning given to such term in section 2(a)(6) of the National Cooperative Research Act of 1984 (15 U.S.C. 4301(a)(6)).".

"(c)(1) The term of office of each member of the Committee, other than the original members, shall be 3 years; except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. Any person who has completed two consecutive full terms of service on the Committee shall thereafter be ineligible for appointment during the one-year period following the expiration of the second such term.

"(2) The original members of the Committee shall be elected to three classes of three members each; one class shall have a term of one year, one a term of two years, and the other a term of three years.

Such report shall deal essentially, though not necessarily exclusively, with policy issues or matters which affect the Institute, including the Program established under section 28, or with which the Committee in its official role as the private sector policy advisor of the Institute is concerned. Each such report shall identify areas of research and research techniques of the Institute of potential importance to the long-term competitiveness of United States industry, in which the Institute possesses special competence, which could be used to assist United States enterprises and United States industrial joint research and development ventures.

"(2) The Committee shall render to the Secretary and the Congress such additional reports on specific policy matters as it deems appropriate.".

The purpose of the review is to provide the Secretary and Congress with objective information regarding the uses, strengths, and limitations of the various types of cooperative technology arrangements that have been used in the United States. The review is to provide both an analysis of the ways in which these arrangements can help improve the technological performance and international competitiveness of United States industry, and also to provide the Academies' recommendations regarding ways to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of these types of cooperative arrangements. A special emphasis shall be placed on discussions of these subjects among industry leaders, labor leaders, and officials of the executive branch and Congress. The Secretary is authorized to seek and accept funding for this study from both Federal agencies and private industry.

(2) The members of the review panel shall be drawn from among industry and labor leaders, entrepreneurs, former government officials with great experience in civilian research and technology, and scientific and technical experts, including experts with experience with Federal laboratories.

(3) The review shall analyze the strengths and weaknesses of different types of Federal-industry cooperative arrangements in civilian technology, including but not limited to—

(B) cooperation between Federal laboratories and United States companies, including activities under the Technology Share Program created by Executive Order 12591;

(C) Federal research and technology transfer arrangements with selected business sectors;

(D) Federal encouragement of, and assistance to, private joint research and development ventures; and

(E) such other mechanisms of Federal-industry cooperation as may be identified by the Secretary.

(4) A report based on the findings and recommendations of the review panel shall be submitted to the Secretary, the President, and Congress within 18 months after the Secretary signs the contracts with the National Academies of Sciences and Engineering.

(B) modern weapons systems are highly dependent on leading edge semiconductor devices, and it is counter to the national security interest to be heavily dependent upon foreign sources for this technology;

(C) governmental responsibilities related to the semiconductor industry are divided among many Federal departments and agencies; and

(D) joint industry-government consideration of semiconductor industry problems is needed at this time.

(2) The purposes of this section are—

(A) to establish the National Advisory Committee on Semiconductors; and

(B) to assign to such Committee the responsibility for devising and promulgating a national semiconductor strategy, including research and development, the implementation of which will assure the continued leadership of the United States in semiconductor technology.

"SEC. 3. It is therefore the declared policy of the United States—

"(1) to designate the metric system of measurement as the preferred system of weights and measures for United States trade and commerce;

"(2) to require that each Federal agency, by a date certain and to the extent economically feasible by the end of the fiscal year 1992, use the metric system of measurement in its procurements, grants, and other business-related activities, except to the extent that such use is impractical or is likely to cause significant inefficiencies or loss of markets to United States firms, such as when foreign competitors are producing competing products in non-metric units;

"(3) to seek out ways to increase understanding of the metric system of measurement through educational information and guidance and in Government publications; and

"(4) to permit the continued use of traditional systems of weights and measures in nonbusiness activities.".

Such reporting shall cease for an agency in the fiscal year after it has fully implemented its efforts under section 3(2). As used in this section, the term 'agency of the Federal Government' means an Executive agency or military department as those terms as defined in chapter 1 of title 5, United States Code.

TITLE VI—EDUCATION AND TRAINING FOR AMERICAN COMPETITIVENESS

SEC. 6001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Education and Training for a Competitive America Act of 1988".

SEC. 6002. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the relationship between a strong and vibrant educational system and a healthy national economy is inseparable in an era in which economic growth is dependent on technology and is imperiled by increased foreign competition;

(2) our Nation's once undisputed pre-eminence in international commerce is facing unprecedented challenges from competitor nations who have given priority to the relationship between education and economic growth in areas such as high technology industries;

(3) our standing in the international marketplace is being further eroded by the presence in the workforce of millions of Americans who are functionally or technologically illiterate or who lack the mathematics, science, foreign language, or vocational skills needed to adapt to the structural changes occurring in the global economy;

(4) our competitive position is also being eroded by declines in the number of students taking advanced courses in mathematics, science, and foreign languages and by the lack of modern technical and laboratory equipment in our educational institutions;

(5) restoring our competitiveness and enhancing our productivity will require that all workers possess basic educational skills and that many others possess highly specific skills in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and vocational areas; and

(6) our Nation must recognize the substantial impact that an investment in human capital will have on increasing productivity.

(b) Purpose.—It is therefore the purpose of this title to establish programs designed—

(1) to enhance ongoing efforts in elementary and secondary education;

(2) to improve our productivity and competitive position by investing in human capital;

(3) to assist out-of-school youth and adults who are functionally illiterate in obtaining the basic skills needed for them to become productive workers in a competitive economy;

(4) to help educational institutions prepare those engaged in work relating to mathematics, science, and foreign languages by improving and expanding instruction in those areas and by modernizing laboratory and technical equipment;

(5) to enhance the skills of workers affected, or about to be affected, by economic change, in order to prevent dislocation within existing industries and to strengthen emerging domestic industries; and

(6) to accomplish such purposes without impairing the availability of funds to carry out existing programs that address the needs of dislocated workers, such as previously authorized education programs.

Subtitle B—Technology and Training

CHAPTER 1—TRANSFER OF EDUCATION AND TRAINING SOFTWARE

SEC. 6101. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Training Technology Transfer Act of 1988".

SEC. 6102. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) Federal agencies, particularly the Department of Defense, have made extensive investments of public funds in the development of education and training software;

(2) much knowledge and education and training software, especially computer programs and videodisc systems, is directly transferable to the private sector or could be transferable to the private sector after conversion;

(3) the transfer of education and training software to the public and private sector could properly augment existing Federal programs for the training of new industrial workers or the retraining of workers whose jobs have been disrupted because of technological developments, foreign trade, and changes in consumer requirements; and

(4) the transfer of education and training software to the public and private sector would be especially beneficial to small business concerns which lack the resources to develop such software independently.

(b) Purpose.—Therefore, it is the purpose of this chapter to facilitate the transfer of education and training software from Federal agencies to the public and private sector and to State and local governments and agencies thereof, including educational systems and educational institutions, in order to support the education, training, and retraining of industrial workers, especially workers in small business concerns.

SEC. 6103. OFFICE OF TRAINING TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER.

(a) Office Established.—There is established in the Office of Educational Research and Improvement of the Department of Education an Office of Training Technology Transfer. The Office shall be headed by a Director, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of Education. The Director shall be compensated at the rate provided for GS-16 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) Personnel.—To carry out this chapter, the Director may appoint personnel in accordance with the civil service laws, and may compensate such personnel in accordance with the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 6104. FUNCTIONS OF THE OFFICE.

(a) Clearinghouse Required.—(1) The Director shall compile and maintain a current and comprehensive clearinghouse of all knowledge and education and training software developed or scheduled for development by or under the supervision of Federal agencies. The clearinghouse shall include, with respect to each item of education and training software listed in the clearinghouse—

(A) a complete description of such software, including the purpose, content, intended academic level or competency level, date of development, imbedded learning and instructional strategies, and mode of presentation of such software;

(B) a description of each type of computer hardware which is compatible with such software and of any other equipment required to use such software;

(C) a specification of any patent, copyright, or proprietary interest affecting the copying, conversion, or transfer of such software; and

(D) information with respect to any conversion or transfer of such software pursuant to this chapter.

(2) In compiling the clearinghouse required by this subsection, the Director shall—

(A) consult with and utilize fully the resources of all Federal agencies engaged in the collection and dissemination of information concerning education and training software; and

(B) request the participation and cooperation of entities in the legislative and judicial branches of Government.

(b) Dissemination Required.—(1) The Director shall disseminate widely and on a regular basis the clearinghouse required by subsection (a) and any revisions thereof in order to enable all potential commercial users and public interest users of education and training software to receive ample notice that Federal agencies have developed such software, or have scheduled such software for development. In carrying out the preceding sentence, the Director shall—

(A) utilize all interagency and intergovernmental communication mechanisms, including the National Center for Research in Vocational Education, the National Occupational Information Committee, State educational agencies, State occupational information coordinating committees, State job training coordinating councils, private industry councils, State economic development agencies, regional educational laboratories, and the Small Business Administration; and

(B) encourage the participation of independent private sector organizations, including organizations representing State and local educational agencies, educational institutions, technical and professional organizations, and trade associations.

(2) The Director shall develop and distribute, in conjunction with the dissemination of the clearinghouse required under subsection (a), detailed instructions and procedures for securing copies, including such rights thereto as may be required, of education and training software listed in such clearinghouse and guidelines for cooperative agreements between commercial users and public interest users under subsection (d).

(c) Consultation; Public Interest User.—(1) The Director shall advise, consult with, and may provide grants to any prospective public interest user of a education and training software listed in the clearinghouse required under subsection (a) and shall assist such user in securing the transfer of such software from the Federal agency which developed such software at a cost to the public interest user based upon the ability of such user to pay for such transfer. In providing such assistance, the Director shall encourage such public interest user to obtain such software by working with the Training Technology Transfer Officer of such agency. If an agency has not established procedures for the transfer of education and training software, the Director shall negotiate the transfer of such software upon application by such user.

(2) The Director, to such extent and in such amounts as provided in advance by appropriation Acts, may enter into contracts with any qualified agency having expertise in the field of education and qualified private sector business concerns for the conversion of education and training software in order to adapt such software to the requirements of a public interest user.

(d) Consultation; Commercial User.—(1) The Director shall advise and consult with any prospective commercial user of an education and training software listed in the clearinghouse required under subsection (a)(1). The Director may sell or lease such training software, including exclusive or nonexclusive rights in copyrights or patents pertaining thereto, to a commercial user for a price or fee which reflects a reasonable return to the Government.

(2) The Director may waive purchase prices or lease fees for a commercial user of training software, may negotiate reduced purchase prices or lease fees for such commercial user, or may negotiate exclusive sale or lease agreements or other terms favorable to such commercial user if such commercial user agrees to enter into a cooperative agreement with a public interest user or a group of public interest users in accordance with this section. Under the preceding sentence, the Director may not waive such prices or fees, negotiate reduced prices or fees, or negotiate exclusive agreements or favorable terms for a commercial user unless such cooperative agreement—

(A) provides for the conversion of the education and training software by the commercial user in order to meet the specific needs of the public interest user or group of public interest users;

(B) provides that such conversion will be performed without charge to the public interest user or group of users; and

(C) is acceptable to the Director.

(3) In negotiating terms for the sale or lease of education and training software pursuant to subsection (b), the Director shall give preferential consideration to cooperative agreements which—

(A) will result in enhancing the employment potential and potential earnings of the maximum number of individuals;

(B) encourage and promote multiple uses of education and training software converted pursuant to this section by users with similar education needs; and

(C) provide beneficial uses of education and training software for businesses.

(4) Any education and training software converted pursuant to subsection (b) shall be listed in the clearinghouse required by subsection (a)(1) and shall be available for transfer to any other public interest user.

(e) Study Required.—(1) The Director shall study the effectiveness of transfers and conversions of education and training software pursuant to this chapter, and shall analyze national needs for methods to convert education and training software which are in addition to the method provided in subsection (d)(2).

(2) The Director shall submit to the Congress a report that—

(A) describes the study and analysis conducted as required by paragraph (1); and

(B) contains recommendations of the Director concerning whether the public interest is served through the program of grants and contracts to public interest users to support conversion of education and training software.

"(A) One-third of such amount shall be allotted among the States on the basis of the relative number of unemployed individuals who reside in each State as compared to the total number of unemployed individuals in all the States.

"(B) One-third of such amount shall be allotted among the States on the basis of the relative excess number of unemployed individuals who reside in each State as compared to the total excess number of unemployed individuals in all the States. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'excess number' means the number which represents unemployed individuals in excess of 4.5 percent of the civilian labor force in the State.

"(C) One-third of such amount shall be allotted among the States on the basis of the relative number of individuals who have been unemployed for 15 weeks or more and who reside in each State as compared to the total number of such individuals in all the States.

"(2) As soon as satisfactory data are available under section 462(e) of this Act, the Secretary shall allot amounts appropriated to carry out part B and this part for any fiscal year to each State so that—

"(A) 25 percent of such amount shall be allotted on the basis of each of the factors described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (1), respectively, for a total of 75 percent of the amount allotted; and

"(B) 25 percent of such amount shall be allotted among the States on the basis of the relative number of dislocated workers in such State in the most recent period for which satisfactory data are available under section 462(e) and, when available, under section 462(f) of this Act.

"(c) Reservations for State Activities and for Substate Grantees in Need.—(1) The Governor may reserve not more than 40 percent of the amount allotted to the State under section 302(a)(1) for—

The amount so reserved shall be allocated on the basis of need and distributed to such grantees not later than 9 months after the beginning of the program year for which the allotment was made.

"(d) Within State Distribution.—The Governor shall allocate the remainder of the amount allotted to the State under this part to substate areas for services authorized in this part, based on an allocation formula prescribed by the Governor. Such formula may be amended by the Governor not more than once for each program year. Such information shall include (but is not limited to)—

"(b) Amount Available for Reallotment.—The amount available for reallotment is equal to—

"(1) the amount by which the unexpended balance of the State allotment at the end of the program year prior to the program year for which the determination under this section is made exceeds 20 percent of such allotment for that prior program year; plus

"(2) the unexpended balance of the State allotment from any program year prior to the program year in which there is such excess.

"(c) Method of Reallotment.—(1) The Secretary shall determine the amount that would be allotted to each eligible State by using the factors described in section 302(b) to allocate among eligible States the amount available pursuant to subsection (b) of this section.

"(2) The Secretary shall allot to each eligible high unemployment State the amount determined for that State under the procedure in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(3) The Secretary shall, by using the factors described in section 302(b), allot to eligible States the amount available that remains after the allotment required by paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(d) State Procedures With Respect to Reallotment.—The Governor of each State shall prescribe uniform procedures for the expenditure of funds by substate grantees in order to avoid the requirement that funds be made available for reallotment under subsection (b). "(4) the State will provide to additional dislocated workers (as defined in section 301(a)(2)) the services available under this title to eligible dislocated workers only if the Governor of such State determines that such services may be provided to additional dislocated workers without adversely affecting the delivery of such services to eligible dislocated workers;

"(5) the State unit will exchange information and coordinate programs with—

"(A) the appropriate economic development agency, for the purpose of developing strategies to avert plant closings or mass layoffs and to accelerate the reemployment of affected individuals;

"(8) the State will not prescribe any standard for the operation of programs under this part that is inconsistent with section 106(g);

"(9) the State job training coordinating council has reviewed and commented in writing on the plan; and

"(10) the delivery of services with funds made available under this title will be integrated or coordinated with services or payments made available under chapter 2 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 and provided by any State or local agencies designated under section 239 of the Trade Act of 1974.

"(e) Complaint, Investigation, Penalty.—(1) Whenever the Secretary receives a complaint or a report from an aggrieved party or a public official that a State is not complying with the provisions of the State plan required by this section, the Secretary shall investigate such report or complaint.

"(2)(A) Whenever the Secretary determines that there has been such a failure to comply and that other remedies under this Act are not available or are not adequate to achieve compliance, the Secretary may withhold an amount not to exceed 10 percent of the allotment of the State for the fiscal year in which the determination is made for each such violation.

"(B) No determination may be made under this paragraph until the State affected is afforded adequate notice and opportunity for a hearing.

"(f) Special Rule.—The provisions of section 102(h) and 105(d), relating to cases in which a service delivery area is a State, shall apply to this title.

"(5) The Governor may deny a request for designation under paragraph (4)(B) if the Governor determines that such designation would not be consistent with the effective delivery of services to eligible dislocated workers in various labor market areas (including urban and rural areas) within the State, or would not otherwise be appropriate to carry out the purposes of this title.

"(6) The designations made under this section may not be revised more than once each two years, in accordance with the requirements of this section.

"SUBSTATE PLAN

"Sec. 313. Prior to the submission to the Governor, the plan shall be submitted for review and comment to the other parties to the agreement described in section 312(b).

"(b) Contents of Substate Plan.—The substate plan shall contain a statement of—

Section 305 of the Trade Agreements Act of 1979 (19 U.S.C. 2515) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(d) Annual Report on Foreign Discrimination.—

"(1) Annual report required.—The President shall, no later than April 30, 1990, and annually on April 30 thereafter, submit to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, as well as other appropriate Senate committees, a report on the extent to which foreign countries discriminate against United States products or services in making government procurements.

"(2) IDENTIFICATIONS REQUIRED.—In the annual report, the President shall identify (and continue to identify subject to subsections (f)(5) and (g)(3)) any countries, other than least developed countries, that—

"(A) are signatories to the Agreement and not in compliance with the requirements of the Agreement;

"(B)(i) are signatories to the Agreement; (ii) are in compliance with the Agreement but, in the government procurement of products or services not covered by the Agreement, maintain a significant and persistent pattern or practice of discrimination against United States products or services which results in identifiable harm to United States businesses; and (iii) whose products or services are acquired in significant amounts by the United States Government; or

"(C)(i) are not signatories to the Agreement; (ii) maintain, in government procurement, a significant and persistent pattern or practice of discrimination against United States products or services which results in identifiable harm to United States businesses; and (iii) whose products or services are acquired in significant amounts by the United States Government.

"(3) CONSIDERATIONS IN MAKING IDENTIFICATIONS.—In making the identifications required by paragraph (1), the President shall—

"(A) use the requirements of the Agreement, government procurement practices, and the effects of such practices on United States businesses as a basis for evaluating whether the procurement practices of foreign governments do not provide fair market opportunities for United States products or services;

"(B) take into account, among other factors, whether and to what extent countries that are signatories to the Agreement, and other countries described in paragraph (1) of this subsection—

"(i) use sole-sourcing or otherwise noncompetitive procedures for procurements that could have been conducted using competitive procedures;

"(ii) conduct what normally would have been one procurement as two or more procurements, to decrease the anticipated contract values below the Agreement's value threshold or to make the procurements less attractive to United States businesses;

"(iii) announce procurement opportunities with inadequate time intervals for United States businesses to submit bids; and

"(iv) use specifications in such a way as to limit the ability of United States suppliers to participate in procurements; and

"(C) use any other additional criteria deemed appropriate.

"(4) CONTENTS OF REPORTS.—The reports required by this subsection shall include, with respect to each country identified under subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (1), the following:

"(A) a description of the specific nature of the discrimination, including (for signatory countries) any provision of the Agreement with which the country is not in compliance;

"(B) an identification of the United States products or services that are affected by the noncompliance or discrimination;

"(C) an analysis of the impact of the noncompliance or discrimination on the commerce of the United States and the ability of United States companies to compete in foreign government procurement markets; and

"(D) a description of the status, action taken, and disposition of cases of noncompliance or discrimination identified in the preceding annual report with respect to such country.

"(5) INFORMATION AND ADVICE FROM GOVERNMENT AGENCIES AND UNITED STATES BUSINESSES.—In developing the annual reports required by this subsection, the President shall seek information and advice from executive agencies through the interagency trade organization established under section 242(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, and from United States businesses in the United States and in countries that are signatories to the Agreement and in other foreign countries whose products or services are acquired in significant amounts by the United States Government.

"(6) IMPACT OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—The President shall take into account, in identifying countries in the annual report and in any action required by this section, the relative impact of any noncompliance with the Agreement or of other discrimination on United States commerce and the extent to which such noncompliance or discrimination has impeded the ability of United States suppliers to participate in procurements on terms comparable to those available to suppliers of the country in question when seeking to sell goods or services to the United States Government.

"(7) IMPACT ON PROCUREMENT COSTS.—Such report shall also include an analysis of the impact on United States Government procurement costs that may occur as a consequence of any sanctions that may be required by subsection (f) or (g) of this section.

"(e) CONSULTATION.—No later than the date the annual report is submitted under subsection (d)(1), the United States Trade Representative, on behalf of the United States, shall request consultations with any countries identified in the report to obtain their compliance with the Agreement or the elimination of their discriminatory procurement practices unless the country is identified as discriminatory pursuant to section 305(d)(1) in the preceding annual report.

"(f) PROCEDURES WITH RESPECT TO VIOLATIONS OF THE AGREEMENT.—

"(1) INITIATION OF DISPUTE SETTLEMENT PROCEDURES.—If, within 60 days after the annual report is submitted under subsection (d)(1), a signatory country identified pursuant to subsection (d)(1)(A) has not complied with the Agreement, then the United States Trade Representative shall promptly request proceedings on the matter under the formal dispute settlement procedures provided under the Agreement unless such proceedings are already underway pursuant to the identification of the signatory country under section 305(d)(1) as not in compliance in a preceding annual report.

"(2) SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES.—If, before the end of a year following the initiation of dispute settlement procedures—

"(A) the other participant to the dispute settlement procedures has complied with the Agreement,

"(B) the other participant to the procedures takes the action recommended as a result of the procedures to the satisfaction of the President, or

"(C) the procedures result in a determination requiring no action by the other participant, the President shall take no action to limit Government procurement from that participant.

"(3) SANCTIONS AFTER FAILURE OF DISPUTE RESOLUTION.—If the dispute settlement procedures initiated pursuant to this subsection with any signatory country to the Agreement are not concluded within one year from their initiation or the country has not met the requirements of paragraph (2)(A) or (2)(B), then—

"(A) from the end of such one year period, such signatory country shall be considered as a signatory not in good standing of the Agreement and the prohibition on procurement contained in section 4 of the Act of March 3, 1933, shall apply to such country; and

"(B) on the day after the end of such one year period, the President shall revoke the waiver of discriminatory purchasing requirements granted to that signatory country pursuant to section 301(a) of this Act.

"(4) WITHHOLDING AND MODIFICATION OF SANCTIONS.—If the President determines that imposing or continuing the sanctions required by subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (3) would harm the public interest of the United States, the President may, to the extent necessary to apply appropriate limitations that are equivalent, in their effect, to the noncompliance with the Agreement by that signatory country—

"(A) withhold the imposition of either (but not both) of such sanctions;

"(B) modify or restrict the application of either or both such sanctions, subject to such terms and conditions as the President considers appropriate; or

"(C) take any combination of the actions permitted by subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph.

"(5) TERMINATION OF SANCTIONS AND REINSTATEMENT OF WAIVERS.—The President may terminate the sanctions imposed under paragraph (3) or (4), reinstate the waiver of discriminatory purchasing requirements granted to that signatory country pursuant to section 301(a) of this Act, and remove that country from the report under subsection (d)(1) of this section at such time as the President determines that—

"(A) the signatory country has complied with the Agreement;

"(B) the signatory country has taken corrective action as a result of the dispute settlement procedures to the satisfaction of the President; or

"(C) the dispute settlement procedures result in a determination requiring no action by the other signatory country.

SEC. 9004. DAMAGES FOR INFRINGEMENT.

(a) LIMITATIONS AND OTHER REMEDIES.—Section 287 of title 35, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in the section heading by striking "Limitation on damages" and inserting "Limitation on damages and other remedies";

(2) by inserting "(a)" before "Patentees"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(b)(1) An infringer under section 271(g) shall be subject to all the provisions of this title relating to damages and injunctions except to the extent those remedies are modified by this subsection or section 9006 of the Process Patent Amendments Act of 1988. The modifications of remedies provided in this subsection shall not be available to any person who—

"(A) practiced the patented process;

"(B) owns or controls, or is owned or controlled by, the person who practiced the patented process; or

"(C) had knowledge before the infringement that a patented process was used to make the product the importation, use, or sale of which constitutes the infringement.

"(2) No remedies for infringement under section 271(g) of this title shall be available with respect to any product in the possession of, or in transit to, the person subject to liability under such section before that person had notice of infringement with respect to that product. The person subject to liability shall bear the burden of proving any such possession or transit.

"(3)(A) In making a determination with respect to the remedy in an action brought for infringement under section 271(g), the court shall consider—

"(i) the good faith demonstrated by the defendant with respect to a request for disclosure,

"(ii) the good faith demonstrated by the plaintiff with respect to a request for disclosure, and

"(iii) the need to restore the exclusive rights secured by the patent.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the following are evidence of good faith:

"(i) a request for disclosure made by the defendant;

"(ii) a response within a reasonable time by the person receiving the request for disclosure; and

"(iii) the submission of the response by the defendant to the manufacturer, or if the manufacturer is not known, to the supplier, of the product to be purchased by the defendant, together with a request for a written statement that the process claimed in any patent disclosed in the response is not used to produce such product.

The failure to perform any acts described in the preceding sentence is evidence of absence of good faith unless there are mitigating circumstances. Mitigating circumstances include the case in which, due to the nature of the product, the number of sources for the product, or like commercial circumstances, a request for disclosure is not necessary or practicable to avoid infringement.

"(4)(A) For purposes of this subsection, a 'request for disclosure' means a written request made to a person then engaged in the manufacture of a product to identify all process patents owned by or licensed to that person, as of the time of the request, that the person then reasonably believes could be asserted to be infringed under section 271(g) if that product were imported into, or sold or used in, the United States by an unauthorized person. A request for disclosure is further limited to a request—

"(i) which is made by a person regularly engaged in the United States in the sale of the same type of products as those manufactured by the person to whom the request is directed, or which includes facts showing that the person making the request plans to engage in the sale of such products in the United States;

"(ii) which is made by such person before the person's first importation, use, or sale of units of the product produced by an infringing process and before the person had notice of infringement with respect to the product; and

"(iii) which includes a representation by the person making the request that such person will promptly submit the patents identified pursuant to the request to the manufacturer, or if the manufacturer is not known, to the supplier, of the product to be purchased by the person making the request, and will request from that manufacturer or supplier a written statement that none of the processes claimed in those patents is used in the manufacture of the product.

"(B) In the case of a request for disclosure received by a person to whom a patent is licensed, that person shall either identify the patent or promptly notify the licensor of the request for disclosure.

"(C) A person who has marked, in the manner prescribed by subsection (a), the number of the process patent on all products made by the patented process which have been sold by that person in the United States before a request for disclosure is received is not required to respond to the request for disclosure. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'all products' does not include products made before the effective date of the Process Patent Amendments Act of 1988.

"(5)(A) For purposes of this subsection, notice of infringement means actual knowledge, or receipt by a person of a written notification, or a combination thereof, of information sufficient to persuade a reasonable person that it is likely that a product was made by a process patented in the United States.

"(B) A written notification from the patent holder charging a person with infringement shall specify the patented process alleged to have been used and the reasons for a good faith belief that such process was used. The patent holder shall include in the notification such information as is reasonably necessary to explain fairly the patent holder's belief, except that the patent holder is not required to disclose any trade secret information.

"(C) A person who receives a written notification described in subparagraph (B) or a written response to a request for disclosure described in paragraph (4) shall be deemed to have notice of infringement with respect to any patent referred to in such written notification or response unless that person, absent mitigating circumstances—

"(i) promptly transmits the written notification or response to the manufacturer or, if the manufacturer is not known, to the supplier, of the product purchased or to be purchased by that person; and

"(ii) receives a written statement from the manufacturer or supplier which on its face sets forth a well grounded factual basis for a belief that the identified patents are not infringed.

"(D) For purposes of this subsection, a person who obtains a product made by a process patented in the United States in a quantity which is abnormally large in relation to the volume of business of such person or an efficient inventory level shall be rebuttably presumed to have actual knowledge that the product was made by such patented process.

"(6) A person who receives a response to a request for disclosure under this subsection shall pay to the person to whom the request was made a reasonable fee to cover actual costs incurred in complying with the request, which may not exceed the cost of a commercially available automated patent search of the matter involved, but in no case more than $500.".

(b) Technical Amendment.—The item relating to section 287 of title 35, United States Code, in the table of sections for chapter 29 of such title is amended to read as follows:

"287. Limitation on damages and other remedies; marking and notice.".

SEC. 9005. PRESUMPTION IN CERTAIN INFRINGEMENT ACTIONS.

(a) Presumption That Product Made by Patented Process.—Chapter 29 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§295. Presumption: Product made by patented process

"In actions alleging infringement of a process patent based on the importation, sale, or use of a product which is made from a process patented in the United States, if the court finds—

"(1) that a substantial likelihood exists that the product was made by the patented process, and

"(2) that the plaintiff has made a reasonable effort to determine the process actually used in the production of the product and was unable so to determine, the product shall be presumed to have been so made, and the burden of establishing that the product was not made by the process shall be on the party asserting that it was not so made.".

(b) Conforming Amendment.—The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to section 294 the following:

"295. Presumption: Product made by patented process.".

SEC. 9006. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) In General.—The amendments made by this subtitle take effect 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act and, subject to subsections (b) and (c), shall apply only with respect to products made or imported after the effective date of the amendments made by this subtitle.

(b) Exceptions.—The amendments made by this subtitle shall not abridge or affect the right of any person or any successor in business of such person to continue to use, sell, or import any specific product already in substantial and continuous sale or use by such person in the United States on January 1, 1988, or for which substantial preparation by such person for such sale or use was made before such date, to the extent equitable for the protection of commercial investments made or business commenced in the United States before such date. This subsection shall not apply to any person or any successor in business of such person using, selling, or importing a product produced by a patented process that is the subject of a process patent enforcement action commenced before January 1, 1987, before the International Trade Commission, that is pending or in which an order has been entered.

(c) Retention of Other Remedies.—The amendments made by this subtitle shall not deprive a patent owner of any remedies available under subsections (a) through (f) of section 271 of title 35, United States Code, under section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930, or under any other provision of law.

SEC. 9007. REPORTS TO CONGRESS.

(a) Contents.—The Secretary of Commerce shall, not later than the end of each

1-year period described in subsection (b), report to the Congress on the effect of the amendments made by this subtitle on those domestic industries that submit complaints to the Department of Commerce, during that 1-year period, alleging that their legitimate sources of supply have been adversely affected by the amendments made by this subtitle.

(b) WHEN SUBMITTED.—A report described in subsection (a) shall be submitted with respect to each of the five 1-year periods which occur successively beginning on the effective date of the amendments made by this subtitle and ending five years after that effective date.

Subtitle B—Foreign Filing

SEC. 9101. INCREASED EFFECTIVENESS OF PATENT LAW.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Patent Law Foreign Filing Amendments Act of 1988".

(b) FILING OF APPLICATIONS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—(1) Section 184 of title 35, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in the third sentence by—

(i) striking out "inadvertently"; and

(ii) inserting "through error and without deceptive intent" after "filed abroad"; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The scope of a license shall permit subsequent modifications, amendments, and supplements containing additional subject matter if the application upon which the request for the license is based is not, or was not, required to be made available for inspection under section 181 of this title and if such modifications, amendments, and supplements do not change the general nature of the invention in a manner which would require such application to be made available for inspection under such section 181. In any case in which a license is not, or was not, required in order to file an application in any foreign country, such subsequent modifications, amendments, and supplements may be made, without a license, to the application filed in the foreign country if the United States application was not required to be made available for inspection under section 181 and if such modifications, amendments, and supplements do not, or did not, change the general nature of the invention in a manner which would require the United States application to have been made available for inspection under such section 181.".

(2) Section 185 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by inserting immediately before the period in the last sentence the following: ", unless the failure to procure such license was through error and without deceptive intent, and the patent does not disclose subject matter within the scope of section 181 of this title.".

(3) Section 186 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by inserting "willfully" after "whoever", the second place it appears.

(c) REGULATIONS.—The Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to implement the amendments made by this section.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) Subject to paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection, the amendments made by this section shall apply to all United States patents granted before, on, or after the date of enactment of this section, to all applications for United States patents pending on or filed after such date of enactment, and to all licenses under section 184 granted before, on, or after the date of enactment of this section.

(2) The amendments made by this section shall not affect any final decision made by a court or the Patent and Trademark Office before the date of enactment of this section with respect to a patent or application for patent, if no appeal from such decision is pending and the time for filing an appeal has expired.

(3) No United States patent granted before the date of enactment of this section shall abridge or affect the right of any person or his successors in business who made, purchased, or used, prior to such date of enactment, anything protected by the patent, to continue the use of, or to sell to others to be used or sold, the specific thing so made, purchased, or used, if the patent claims were invalid or otherwise unenforceable on a ground obviated by this section and the person made, purchased, or used the specific thing in reasonable reliance on such invalidity or unenforceability. If a person reasonably relied on such invalidity or unenforceability, the court before which such matter is in question may provide for the continued manufacture, use, or sale of the thing made, purchased, or used as specified, or for the manufacture, use, or sale of which substantial preparation was made before the date of enactment of this section, and it may also provide for the continued practice of any process practiced, or for the practice of which substantial preparation was made, prior to the date of enactment of this section, to the extent and under such terms as the court deems equitable for the protection of investments made or business commenced before such date of enactment.

(4) The amendments made by this section shall not affect the right of any party in any case pending in court on the date of enactment of this section to have its rights or liabilities—

(A) under any patent before the court, or

(B) under any patent granted after such date of enactment which is related to the patent before the court by deriving priority rights under section 120 or 121 of title 35, United States Code, from a patent or an application for patent common to both patents, determined on the basis of the substantive law in effect before the date of enactment of this section.

Subtitle C—Patent Term Extension

SEC. 9201. PATENT TERM EXTENSION.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the term of United States Patent number 3,674,836 issued for the drug Lopid shall be extended in accordance with section 9202 for 3 years and 6 months from the date of its expiration.

(b) CONDITIONS.—

(1) No extension of the term of the patent described in subsection (a) may be made unless there has been submitted for the drug Lopid a supplemental new drug application under section 505 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act for the approval of an expansion of the permitted indications and usage in the labeling of the drug.

(2) If the Secretary of Health and Human Services makes a final determination, after the date of the enactment of this Act, disapproving the first supplemental new drug application submitted under section 505 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act for the approval of an expansion of the permitted indications and usage in the labeling of the drug Lopid—

(A) no extension shall be granted for the term of the patent under subsection (a) if the final determination of disapproval is issued before the date the term of the patent is extended under subsection (a), and

(B) if an extension has been granted under subsection (a) before the final determination of disapproval is issued, the extension shall be terminated as of the date of such disapproval.

The Secretary shall promptly notify the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks of such a disapproval.

SEC. 9202. PROCEDURE.

(a) NOTICE.—To receive the patent term extension under section 9201(a), the owner of record of the patent shall notify the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks before January 4, 1989, of the identity of the supplemental new drug application required under section 9201(b)(1).

(b) EXTENSION.—On receipt of the notice under subsection (a), the Commissioner shall, in accordance with section 9201, promptly issue to the owner of record of the patent a certificate of extension, under seal, stating the fact and length of the extension and indicating that such extension is limited to the subject matter of claim 1 (insofar as claim 1 is needed to cover the compound described in claim 6 and additionally insofar as claim 1 is needed to cover the pharmaceutically acceptable salts of the compound described in claim 6) and claim 6 of the patent. Such certificate shall be recorded in the official file of the patent extended and such certificate shall be considered as part of the original patent, and an appropriate notice shall be published in the Official Gazette of the Patent and Trademark Office. If the extension of the term of the patent is to be terminated under section 9201(b), the Commissioner shall promptly issue a certificate of termination of extension, under seal, stating the fact that the patent term extension is terminated, effective on the date of the final determination that the supplemental new drug application under section 505 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act was disapproved. Such certificate shall be recorded in the official file of the patent and such certificate shall be considered as a part of the original patent, and an appropriate notice shall be published in the Official Gazette of the Patent and Trademark Office.

(b) Authority To Conduct Investigations.—The Federal Maritime Commission shall investigate whether any laws, rules, regulations, policies, or practices of foreign governments, or any practices of foreign carriers or other persons providing maritime or maritime-related services in a foreign country result in the existence of conditions that—

(1) adversely affect the operations of United States carriers in United States oceanborne trade; and

(2) do not exist for foreign carriers of that country in the United States under the laws of the United States or as a result of acts of United States carriers or other persons providing maritime or maritime-related services in the United States.

(c) Investigations.—(1) Investigations under subsection (b) of this section may be initiated by the Commission on its own motion or on the petition of any person, including any common carrier, shipper, shippers' association, ocean freight forwarder, or marine terminal operator, or any branch, department, agency, or other component of the Government of the United States.

(2) The Commission shall complete any such investigation and render a decision within 120 days after it is initiated, except that the Commission may extend such 120-day period for an additional 90 days if the Commission is unable to obtain sufficient information to determine whether a condition specified in subsection (b) of this section exists. Any notice providing such an extension shall clearly state the reasons for such extension.

(d) Information Requests.—(1) In order to further the purposes of subsection (b) of this section, the Commission may, by order, require any person (including any common carrier, shipper, shippers' association, ocean freight forwarder, or marine terminal operator, or any officer, receiver, trustee, lessee, agent or employee thereof) to file with the Commission any periodic or special report, answers to questions, documentary material, or other information which the Commission considers necessary or appropriate. The Commission may require that the response to any such order shall be made under oath. Such response shall be furnished in the form and within the time prescribed by the Commission.

(e) Action Against Foreign Carriers.—(1) Whenever, after notice and opportunity for comment or hearing, the Commission determines that the conditions specified in subsection (b) of this section exist, the Commission shall take such action as it considers necessary and appropriate against any foreign carrier that is a contributing cause to, or whose government is a contributing cause to, such conditions, in order to offset such conditions. Such action may include—

(A) limitations on sailings to and from United States ports or on the amount or type of cargo carried;

(f) Actions Upon Request of the Commission.—Whenever the conditions specified in subsection (b) of this section are found by the Commission to exist, upon the request of the Commission—

(1) the collector of customs at any port or place of destination in the United States shall refuse the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes (46 App. U.S.C. 91) to any vessel of a foreign carrier that is identified by the Commission under subsection (e) of this section; and

(2) the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating shall deny entry, for purposes of oceanborne trade, of any vessel of a foreign carrier that is identified by the Commission under subsection (e) of this section to any port or place in the United States or the navigable waters of the United States, or shall detain any such vessel at the port or place in the United States from which it is about to depart for any other port or place in the United States.

Section 2(b)(2) of the International Air Transportation Fair Competitive Practices Act of 1974 (49 U.S.C. App. 1159b(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) in the third sentence by striking out "but in no event may" and all that follows through "180 days" and inserting in lieu thereof "but the aggregate period for taking action under this subsection may not exceed 90 days"; and

(2) by inserting after the third sentence the following new sentence: "However, if on the last day of such 90-day period, the Secretary finds that—

"(A) negotiations with the foreign government have progressed to a point that a satisfactory resolution of the complaint appears imminent;

"(B) no United States air carrier has been subject to economic injury by the foreign government or an instrumentality of the foreign government (including a foreign air carrier) as a result of the filing of the complaint; and

"(C) public interest requires additional time before the taking of action with respect to the complaint; the Secretary may extend such 90-day period for not to exceed an additional 90 days.".

SEC. 10012. VIEWS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE.

Section 2(b) of the International Air Transportation Fair Competitive Practices Act of 1974 (49 U.S.C. App. 1159b(b)) is amended—

"(B) provide any affected air carrier or foreign air carrier with reasonable notice and such opportunity to file written evidence and argument as is consistent with acting on the complaint within the time limits set forth in this subsection.".

SEC. 10013. REPORTING ON ACTIONS TAKEN WITH RESPECT TO COMPLAINTS.

Section 2 of the International Air Transportation Fair Competitive Practices Act of 1974 (49 U.S.C. App. 1159b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Not later than the 30th day after taking action with respect to a complaint under this section, the Secretary of Transportation shall report to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate on actions that have been taken under this section with respect to the complaint.".

The CHAIRMAN. No amendments to the bill being in order, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. Gray of Illinois] having assumed the chair, Mr. Beilenson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4848) to enhance the competitiveness of American industry, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 491, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. MICHEL

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MICHEL. I am, in its present form, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. Michel moves to recommit the bill, H.R. 4848, to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the bill back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:
>
> "Strike out section 1910 (entitled Ethyl Alcohol and Mixtures for Fuel Use);
> "And redesignate succeeding sections accordingly."

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 4 of rule XVI, I demand an hour of debate, equally divided, on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Michel] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Gibbons] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the minority leader, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Michel].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, let me first thank the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. Gibbons] for his procedural demand for an hour's debate in order that we might have a little bit of an elongated discussion on this issue. I think most of the Members deferred taking time during the course of general debate in order that we might consolidate that debate here in consideration of the motion to recommit.

This motion does one thing. It strikes the section dealing with ethanol from the bill. Everything else in the measure would remain intact. The ethanol provision in the bill in essence allow five trading companies an exemption from current law, which requires that any ethanol coming into the United States duty free from the Caribbean must have been produced with Caribbean Basin sugar cane.

These five plants, some of which are to be constructed and three of which are foreign owned, would be dehydration plants only, which means that all they do is dry out the ethanol. As such, they contribute very little to the Caribbean economy. Estimates are that the plants would contribute only 10 cents per gallon and 4 workers per million gallons produced to those economies in the Caribbean, compared to $1.50 per gallon and 410 workers per millon for a full fermentation facility.

When we enacted the Caribbean Basin Initiative, we intended their products would receive that free treatment if the production of those products significantly benefits their economies. We did not intend to allow them to receive such favorable treatment when they simply serve as little more than a way station for products produced elsewhere. Not only does the ethanol provision run contrary to the CBI Program, it also runs contrary to the overall intent of this trade bill before us today.

What it does is allow ethanol produced in Europe with subsidized wine to be shipped duty free into the United States through the Caribbean. In a bill that is designed to protect U.S. producers against unfair trade practices, what we are doing is not only condoning the importing of subsidized ethanol from Europe, where there are many restrictions against our own agricultural products, but we are actually subsidizing that ethanol ourselves by permitting it to enter duty free. In a sense we are providing jobs for Europeans at the expense of jobs for Americans.

And the cheap European ethanol will adversely impact on our own domestic ethanol producers and will hurt our farmers by displacing markets for domestic corn. It appears from this provision that we are more interested in subsidizing Italian grape farmers that American corn farmers.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received a letter from the Deputy Secretary of Agriculture, Peter Meyers, in which he said the following:

> The competitive situation facing U.S. ethanol producers has only been exacerbated by the current drought in the Midwest and Southeast. To allow ethanol produced in CBI countries from subsidized European wine alcohol to undercut domestic ethanol prices would only worsen the eonomic conditions facing this industry.

Mr. Speaker, I will of course include the full text of the letter under my reservation to revise and extend my remarks, but in conclusion the ethanol provisions in a sense represent a sweetheart arrangement for a few select companies. They do very little to benefit the Caribbean nations, and they continue to be opposed by the administration. If allowed to remain in the bill, they could lead to a doubling of ethanol imports into this country during the next 2 years.

I would have to ask my colleagues if that is really what we intended in this trade bill.

I think not, and I would hope that there would be other Members, as I am sure there are on both sides of the aisle, who feel just as strongly as I do who will support my motion to recommit. Obviously, if we have a sufficient number, that will be deleted from the bill forthwith, and then of course the bill would be substantially changed for this Member to be able to vote, as he indicated earlier, in support of the measure.

But, Mr. Speaker, I would ask for my colleagues' support for this motion to recommit.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Matsui].

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rostenkowski], the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

I would like to first of all say that when Congress passed the CBI legislation the stated intent was to bring political and economic stability to that particular region. And the provision regarding the ethanol would merely contribute to that particular effort.

I am somewhat surprised that the maker of the motion to recommit does not support this provision because President Reagan, the Republican President, was the one and is the one who supports CBI.

I would have to also say to the gentleman that with respect to the flooding of the market he knows and everyone else knows that the maximum run out of ethanol that can come in from the Caribbean countries as a result of the formula that was agreed upon by all parties is a little over 2 percent.

The reason that we are having opposition now is because one company has a virtual monopoly in ethanol in the United States, and they want to maintain, unfortunately, that monopoly. And as a result of that we are finding on the coastal counties in the Southwest and Southeast of the United States that they do not have enough ethanol in order to promote gasahol, and there has been a short supply, for example, on the west coast to the east coast, the Southwest, and many regions of this country.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of that I think it is important that we have an additional supply of ethanol even though it is only 2 to 2½ percent of the entire market, and that undoubtedly will be from the Caribbean countries.

And I might also point out one other aspect, if I may, just to the gentleman from Illinois. Last time when this trade bill came before this body the gentleman was quoted as saying in the closing statement, "I am confident that we can sustain the President's position and that, if we come right back with this very same bill; that is, the omnibus trade bill minus the layoff and plant-closing provisions, it would whistle right through the House of Congress and be signed into law."

I am wondering why now the gentleman raises another issue, and perhaps, if he is successful on his motion to recommit, is he going to find a third or fourth issue so that he will never have to vote for this omnibus trade bill?

I would only hope that the Members of this body vote against the motion to recommit because we want to preserve democracy in the Caribbean Basin, but second, we want a stable and steady supply of ethanol in the United States so that we can look for alternative sources of energy.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume just to respond briefly to the gentleman from California [Mr. MATSUI].

Yes, the gentleman quoted me verbatim, and it would not be this gentleman's intention to prolong consideration of the trade bill. But it is a very cantankerous provision, and I am sure that when the vote is cast that it will be quite evident why it is a subject for discussion at a time like this.

So, limited as we are sometimes on motions, or attempts to amend or one motion to recommit, those of us in the minority from time to time have got to take advantage of what little there is in the parliamentary procedure here to give us an opportunity to air our views.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], the minority leader for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most difficult things for a Member of Congress to explain to a constituent is why we would pass a law such as the Caribbean Basin Initiative which, in fact, will cost American jobs. The Caribbean Basin Initiative, as we passed it, allows those countries to export to the United States with special trade treatment to send their products in, and in fact it opens up the opportunity that those products might displace American workers from their jobs. Congress decided, and the President signed the law that this was the policy we should follow for a very important reason.

Mr. Speaker, it is because the Caribbean is our neighbor. Their security economically, militarily and politically is our concern, and we are willing to run the risk as a nation that we may lose American jobs. We may displace some American workers if on the other side of the equation the Caribbean grows in strength.

That is the nature of America. It is the nature of our foreign policy. Some people shake their heads and say, "Why would you do that when people are out of work in this country?"

But, Mr. Speaker, we made the commitment. We should stick by the commitment.

But let me tell my colleagues of the House about an old saying. The good samaritan never goes unpunished.

Well, it has happened here today. No sooner had the ink dried on the Caribbean Basin Initiative then five ethanol trading companies put their lawyers to work, searched through the bill, and guess what they found? They found a loophole large enough in the Caribbean Basin Initiative to drive through tankers of ethanol into the United States. Had this ethanol been manufactured in the Caribbean, it would have been in total compliance with the law. But instead they found that, if they could buy a product 90 percent complete—such as spoiled Spanish wine—take it to a Caribbean country for a minute part of the manufacturing process just long enough to have it stamped "Caribbean" and send it into the United States, it qualified for the Caribbean Basin Initiative, and it came in duty free.

So for the last several years we have had this ongoing battle of how to stop these sharpies with their lawyers who found the loophole in the CBI from using what was our good intention to, in fact, make millions of dollars of profit at the expense of American workers, American farmers and American coal miners.

So now we have before us today a trade bill. Why are we debating it? Because of a legitimate national concern that our trade balance is awful.

Mr. Speaker, we have lost jobs overseas. We are making a conscious, bipartisan effort to bring those jobs back to America. But, as you read this trade bill, you will find one section, only one in the entire bill, that has exactly the opposite effect.

The ethanol provisions, which these five companies have managed to shove into the trade bill, will increase our trade deficit, will cost us American jobs, will penalize the American farmers, will put coal miners out of work, and this is all in the name of a trade bill to help our economy. By providing this special trade treatment for five companies, but allowing these five companies a special privilege to import their ethanol to the United States duty free, we threaten American workers' jobs in the ethanol industry.

I stand before you readily admitting that I represent a part of Illinois where more than half of the ethanol in America is produced. I have looked into the eyes of these workers, these men and women who go to work each day in this industry, and told them that I would come to Congress and represent them. I have told them they should support a trade bill because it is good for America. But, Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell them that this provision is good for America or good for those workers. In fact it will cost them their jobs.

And let me tell you something further. I just returned from my district this weekend. My colleagues should see the impact of the drought on corn farmers in Illinois and across the Nation. They are in for a tough year. We will spend days and weeks devising a Federal program to help them. And yet this bill that we are being asked to vote for today penalize those drought-stricken farmers as much as the searing Sun. What it will do is to bring imported ethanol into the United States at their expense.

Now those who support it say, "Oh, it is only a marginal amount. It is only 9 percent. Isn't that something you can live with?"

We cannot live with 1 percent, Mr. Speaker, if it means that someone is taking a loophole in the law, taking advantage of it, penalizing American workers and farmers.

Who are these five companies that could twist this Congress and its trade bill into such pitiful contortions? Who are these five companies that can subvert the CBI, put Americans out of work and take income from our farmers?

Quite simply, these companies are the smooth operators who are canny enough to find that loophole in the law and turn it into millions of dollars of profit, shrewd enough to stretch the loophole to the breaking point so that we find ourselves in a trade bill designed to help America's economy doing just the opposite.

One of my colleagues has suggested that this section of the Caribbean Basin Initiative is a good one, and I do not quarrel with that, but this provision which these companies are using will allow these Caribbean nations to be treated as little more than economic serfs, little more than colonial plantations, because we are not creating jobs in these countries as we should. They are not taking sugarcane from Jamaica or any other country in the Caribbean to make the ethanol. They are buying tanker loads of spoiled Spanish wine and European commodities and turning this into ethanol in the Caribbean countries. Instead of using Caribbean sugar and creating hundreds of jobs to bolster the struggling economies in the Caribbean, these five companies will exploit not only the Caribbean, but the compassionate goals of the CBI and this Congress.

If my colleagues want to vote for a real helping hand for the Caribbean, vote for the Michel-Durbin motion to recommit. If my colleagues want to vote for helping American workers keep their jobs rather than exporting employment to Europe and Brazil, vote for the Michel-Durbin motion to recommit. If my colleagues want to give American struggling farmers a helping hand as they face the dispair of this drought, vote for the Michel-Durbin motion to recommit.

And if my colleagues want to tell these five companies to find some other get-rich-quick loophole to make their millions, vote for the Michel-Durbin motion to recommit.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MATSUI].

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to understand the gentleman's statement regarding the Caribbean Initiative and the ethanol coming into the country, 2 percent having an effect on the farmers that are involved in the drought because there is going to be a shortage of grain. That means there is going to be a shortage of ethanol. That means that markets will be short, and we might as well have the importation of ethanol in order to have a steady supply, a stable supply for various people that use ethanol in the United States. This will mean a stabilized price, and obviously it will mean a stable supply.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad my colleague has given me an opportunity to expound on that point. If the price of corn goes up, the price of ethanol goes up. If the five companies that want this loophole are able to export more cheaply, they will drive America's domestic ethanol producers out of the market to their benefit.

What the gentleman has stated is a 3 percent of the market, which I think understates the situation. In fact, he is allowing these importers to undercut our domestic ethanol industry when it is the most vulnerable. With high oil prices and high corn prices they are struggling to survive, and what he is doing in supporting this provision is a death blow to this industry. To say it is only 3 percent or 6 percent belies the fact that we are sacrificing American jobs and American farm income for what? For Europeans and Brazilian bank accounts to be swelled with the profits of these countries, not to create jobs in the Caribbean which the CBI was designed to do.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I think the gentleman's statement just makes the point. We want to keep a steady supply and a steady price of ethanol. Unfortunately, what is being looked for is some excess profits out of it.

Mr. DURBIN. Let me tell the gentleman that he is wrong. This year it is estimated that we will harvest some 5 billion bushels of corn in America as compared to a projected harvest of 7 billion bushels. The drought has cost us 2 billion bushels. We have a 2.4 billion bushel carryover from last year. There is an adequate supply to meet our need.

What the gentleman would prefer doing is rather than to help the American corn farmers who are struggling in this drought, this gentleman would rather see that these companies have an opportunity to bring in spoiled Spanish wine and Brazilian ethanol to go through the final distillation process in the Caribbean.

I would rather see American workers and farmers profit from the trade bill than foreign companies exporting into the United States.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, the previous speakers have used words such as "sweetheart arrangement" and "sharpies."

I think it would be helpful if we could go back and review some of the reasons why we are here.

There was a Communist buildup in Grenada. The Reagan administration decided to invade Grenada, talking about how we need to bolster the democracies in the CBI countries. We did that. The administration proposed to help our friends in the Caribbean, sent Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and a delegation down into that area to determine what would be the best way to help. That piece of legislation was passed. As we know, on this floor, there were crippling amendments one after another to try to protect the domestic industry. As a result, that piece of legislation really left very little. There was an ability for processors, yes, to bring in some spoiled wine and do a distillation process; in addition to using the base stock in Jamaica. It is not a correct statement to say that those companies are not attempting to buy and lease and to put sugarcane into production and market so they can use it there.

What this fight really boils down to is two big companies versus the fear of some imports. Let us get down to the bottom line and let us make our vote based on the realities of the situation.

In 1987 there was less than 3 percent imports, according to the U.S. Customs data, from the CBI countries. That was 29 million gallons, compared to 850 million gallons in the United States.

Now, come, come; 3 percent, that is no fear of a multitude of loss of jobs or the death blow of a domestic industry.

Look at 1988. Because of the confusion we have thrown into our good friends in the Caribbean, through April 1988 there have only been 4.2 million gallons imported.

Come, come. That is no fear for any industry in Illinois to think about that this is a death blow, I say to my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

What you have to do is go back and look at the compromise that was struck in the trade bill. It is a fair compromise. One, it only applies to December 31, 1989. It imposes a volume cap of 20 million gallons per facility, so 100 would be the maximum. They do not have the capacity nor the ability to reach the maximum between now and the deadline.

What did we request? I do not have ethanol production in my district. I have very little corn production in my district. I do not know who to believe.

H.R. 4848 is landmark legislation which will help American industry and enhance trade. I strongly support the bill and urge its passage.

The bill should be approved as is and the motion to recommit regarding ethanol and the Caribbean soundly rejected.

Mr. Speaker, I oppose the Republican leader's recommittal motion because I am a friend of American ethanol producers and corn growers. The greatest threats to U.S. ethanol do not lie in the Caribbean but are:

The lack of reliable supply;

Industry concentration; and

Lost credibility and overreaching.

A pressing need for U.S. ethanol is to increase market share in areas such as the southeast coastal States, the Southwest, and California. Historically underserved, these areas are also hardest hit when the largest producers make corn sweeteners instead of ethanol. Unfortunately, the current drought will only exacerbate this situation.

Second, because the ethanol industry tends to be dominated by a handful of large companies, the interests of these giants may not always coincide with small producers, and corn of CBO ethanol is a prime example of overreaching and possible loss in credibility. When Congress enacted the President's CBI program, CBI governments and U.S. companies were urged to look seriously at ethanol investments. With strong United States backing several projects were begun.

Almost from the inception of the CBI, the domestic industry has predicted demise and doom. Yet, U.S. production has more than doubled—from 420 million to more than 850 million gallons today.

At various times, we have been told that CBI nations were poised to export as much as 200 million gallons per year to the United States. But U.S. Customs data shows only 39 million gallons of ethanol from the region last year—less than 3 percent of the U.S. market. Regardless of the facts, the domestic industry lobbied hard to have the CBI ethanol rules changed and the 1986 Tax Reform Act did so. Promoted as encouraging new and "real" investments, the changes have actually cost jobs, retarded new investments, and threatened existing projects.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I feel strongly about this matter because I have visited first hand CBI ethanol manufacturing and agricultural facilities needlessly put at risk unless we act.

The trade bill provision on this matter is a temporary compromise until we can fashion a reasonable long-term policy on this matter. In essence it returns to the status quo, with protections built in for domestic industry and requires GAO and the International Trade Commission to gether the facts.

With all due respect to the distinguished Republican leader, a policy based on facts will further, not hinder, our mutual goals.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

I just want to make it absolutely clear, there is talk that this is an administrative proposal. Nothing could be further from the truth, because the President, as a matter of fact, in his veto message cited this as one of those visions for which he was willing to veto the legislation. So I am not opposing my own administration in offering the motion to recommit to delete this provision, but am looking out for those corn farmers and producers basically—yes, it is a parochial interest out in the Midwest area where we produce a lot of corn and have always been attempting to find a market for it.

Further down the road if perchance we were to have problems in the Persian Gulf and a restriction on oil imports, admittedly first it would be a beefing up of domestic production of oil, but as an alternative source there is nothing wrong with ethanol and if we got to some terrible bind at some future time we might do like Brazil did and mandate 10 percent ethanol and 20 percent to the degree that we would produce it self-sustaining from our own shores without going abroad for that kind of energy power.

So there is good and sufficient reason why we are talking about keeping an ethanol industry alive in this country without giving these kind of special concessions to those who would fatten up Europe, frankly, rather than the Caribbean area, which simply skims off the top a very little bit in the process.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy at this time to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], one of my opponents who happens to be on my side, who obviously has some differing views.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, the ethanol grandfather in the trade bill is one of the very important points in the trade bill. When this Congress and this administration jointly established the Caribbean Basin Initiative it was the hope that we could put jobs and investment into the Caribbean area. One of the things that was supposed to be undertaken down there was the production of ethanol. That has been a sugar-producing area. As everybody knows, the U.S. sugar buying program is down because of the way we sustain a high domestic sugar price. It means that we are not able to buy sugar abroad the way we used to do.

Now, the hard thing for the people in the Caribbean to do is to get the sugar properties so that they can plan them long term so that they could meet the ultimate domestic content, local content rule, that is in our trade bill. At the moment, they cannot do that because the sugar acreages are committed to other purposes. For the long term, they can acquire those properties and will be able to meet a higher level of local content.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, the threat that the gentleman from Illinois speaks of is not a powerhouse. In 1985, imports were 12.4 million gallons, against U.S. production of 625 million. That is 2 percent.

In 1986, imports doubled and they became 3 percent.

In 1987, imports were up to 29 million gallons. That is 3 percent of the 850 million that we produced here.

Our Government tells us that we have got a 1 billion gallon market in this country. We have not ever been able to fill that amount, and so those people who want to protect this industry are trying to protect it from nothing. It cannot produce what we need to produce to create the market for ethanol. If those people really want the market, they ought to get some of the imported stuff in here so that we can create the market that they can fill with their later production.

Mr. Speaker, I note that the Archer Daniels Co., which is pretty much the whole show in the United States with respect to ethanol, has already stopped shipping to Western States, California, Washington, and even Colorado. That means that we do not have the product. We need this product from the Caribbean.

In addition, we have made a pledge to the Caribbean that we are going to help them lift themselves by their own bootstraps.

This is only one tiny little portion of the Caribbean Basin Initiative. It is not the most important thing we are doing there. It is something on which people in the Caribbean are hanging their hats for future jobs, future sugar acreage and future prosperity and a future role in the national security of our country.

If we accept the Michel motion to recommit, we are going to snuff that out and we are going to dry up ethanol supplies.

Even under the provision in this bill, that grandfather is only extended for six companies for 1½ years. We expect to have a full report after the year and a half that is provided for the trade bill. Then we will have a better idea of what is the effect on the local corn producers in the United States, what is the need for local content within the Caribbean.

I believe on the basis of that report, we will be able to legislate in a way that is equitable both to U.S. producers and to our needs and intentions in the Caribbean; but for now, I would urge the rejection of the Michel motion.

It is important to the Caribbean Basin, I think it is also important for the use of ethanol and the building of a domestic market which is going to benefit our domestic corn growers over the long haul that that motion be rejected. I urge that the House do so.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, to ask for recommittal on this important trade bill on the basis of the ethanol issue in the Caribbean would be unthinkable.

The chairman of our committee asked for a delegation, and I headed that delegation to the CBI area last year. We visited some of the ethanol plants. We tried to make an analysis of what is the best approach on this troublesome issue.

When we passed the bill in 1986, we did grant an exemption to three different companies. Two later did not qualify, one did.

It was not our intent to exclude other companies or to show favoritism or to grant anybody a loophole. When we examined it by personal inspection last year, we thought the fair thing would be to extend it to two other companies. There are a total of approximately five now that would be eligible for this temporary exemption. They ought to be granted it.

The amount of ethanol, compared with the productive capacity in this country, is so small that we ought not to hesitate a minute to advance this important program. The ethanol program has got difficulties right now. We do not know just how it is going to operate. We ought not to be having impediments thrown into its path. We ought to go ahead and say to these countries down there that we will cooperate with you.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I take this time also to appeal to this House to consider that we need to pass the CBI legislation. We have an important package that has been prepared, a bill sitting in our committee. Once we can get these trade bills out of the way, it is the intent of the chairman of both the Trade Subcommittee and the full Ways and Means Committee to advance the CBI Program. If we come in here today and pass legislation that curtails expansion of the CBI, I think that would be a clear signal that this administration does not really want to cooperate with us.

This is a very small item.

Now, I come from grain country. I do not want to hurt the grain people in my area. I do not think this bill would, but I think we could hurt the national interests of the United States if we do not pass meaningful CBI legislation this year or just as soon as we can.

So I not only ask not to recommit, I ask this Congress and my own committee to pass the CBI legislation. It needs action. It is crying for passage and we ought not to be doing anything of a negative nature.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I wanted to make two points. One is that the agreement struck requires the ITC and the GAO to do an independent study. Then the Members do not have to worry in the future about competing special interests in terms of taking care of their politics back home.

But to the gentleman from Texas, I would like to let the gentleman know that the Texas Corn Growers Association has written to the chairman of the Finance Committee saying that they do not believe that this compromise would be damaging to them nor to their interests, and in fact have gone on record saying that they are in favor of the compromise and that they think it would help to expand and stabilize the market.

Mr. PICKLE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am glad the gentleman made that point.

□ 1645

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this country is obviously in trouble in the trade area with over $170 billion trade deficits in both 1986 and 1987 causing extensive damage to the fabric of our Nation's economy. Two years ago we became the world's largest debtor nation. We are beginning to mortgage our children's and our grandchildren's futures. What we need today is action on an American trade policy. Inaction is the best recipe for continued erosion of our Nation's productive capabilities and at worst a prescription for irreversible decline.

I rise to support H.R. 4848, the Omnibus Trade Act. I would like to commend the 10 committees, their chairmen and scores of subcommittees for putting together this landmark piece of legislation and conference report. This bill represents the most comprehensive effort to reform and modernize our trade laws and practices in years.

There are no simple answers to the trade issue. Free trade with no restrictions is a goal we all seek. But the fact is that our farmers and business people have faced an increasing barrage of protectionism from other countries in the form of unfair dumping, excessive tariffs, and artificial import barriers.

The question is, Are we going to stand by and permit this to continue, or are we going to take tough action to make clear to others that these barriers to free trade must be removed?

There has been a renaissance in our Nation's thinking about trade over the last 3 years, not only in Congress but with the administration, labor, business, and education. Recordbreaking deficits have forced the trade issue to the front burner and it's hot; so hot that we need a coordinated response to the trade deficit that will cool these skyrocketing deficits.

America has undergone a painful crash course in international trade and finance over the last few years. We all have become aware of the impact on foreign trade on our everyday lives. Even the President has taken action—finally admitting the problem will not simply disappear by itself—by penalizing the Japanese for allegedly breaking a semiconductor price-fixing agreement made in 1986.

American business also has responded to the problem by taking bold new steps to improve productivity and enhance international competitiveness. Across the Nation we find new approaches to increasing competition including improving management techniques, business-labor-education partnerships, retraining programs and greater use of technology. Even foreign governments have reluctantly begun to assume some of the responsibility for the trade imbalances and are at least demonstrating a willingness to work to restore integrity to the international trading system.

While the administration cites the above as "encouraging" and "good news" these initial steps are not sufficient in and of themselves. America needs a comprehensive trade policy to coordinate the complex ties of export enhancement, multilateral negotiations, fiscal and monetary policy, agricultural competitiveness, and marketing strategies. The list goes on and on.

We must have a higher vision of the decisions to be made in these areas and a road map as to where we are headed, what we hope to achieve, and why. We must be sure that in repairing the tire we do not destroy the car; that the left hand does not demolish what the right so carefully built up.

It is for these reasons that I have long advocated the adoption of a comprehensive trade policy. Whether it was the Comprehensive Trade Policy Reform Act of 1985, 1986, or 1987, I do believe that we need some kind of overall policy direction. The problem is too complex and difficult for a quick fix or a barrier to be raised here or there. We must make a long-term commitment to becoming more productive, opening foreign markets and improving our ability to bargain with other nations. The process has just begun and it will tap all of our Nation's resources, patience and perseverance.

The bill before us is by no means perfect and I have particular concerns about some of its provisions as I am sure many Members will. This comprehensive trade legislation, which renews the measures approved by the House last year, provides an excellent starting point for a new bipartisan effort to enhance America's ability to compete. We can not afford another day of allowing the administration to maintain its 7-year policy of malign neglect.

This trade legislation takes major strides to ensuring American exporters equal treatment in foreign protectionist markets by creating a more level playing field for international competition. The current trade laws have proven obsolete and inadequate in response to unfair trade practices abroad.

I would like to highlight several agriculture provisions which I sponsored and which I believe will strengthen the ability of American farmers to market their products abroad.

Title IV of this bill contains a number of provisions designed to enhance the competitiveness of U.S. agricultural products and expand market opportunities abroad. These provisions will improve the effectiveness and efficiency of many existing market development and trade programs administered by the Department of Agriculture. Another provision under this title would also make significant improvements in Federal pesticide monitoring activities to ensure that American consumers have access to a safe food supply and American farmers compete on a level playing field.

I would like to take a moment to highlight several provisions that I sponsored in the legislation before us today.

1. MARKETING ORDERS

The conference agreement provides for the continuous orderly marketing of commodities by permitting expanded inspections on fruit and vegetable imports. It is designed to help ensure that poor quality produce is kept off supermarket shelves and that imported fruits and vegetables comply with the same quality standards required of domestic produce.

Briefly, the legislation provides for an additional period—not to exceed 35 days—during which marketing order requirements could be in effect if the Secretary of Agriculture determines it is necessary to prevent circumvention of a marketing order by imports. Upon request, the Secretary would be required to review such additional period every 3 years.

This provision is not protectionist and does not discriminate against foreign growers. It is GATT compatible since the same inspection obligation is required of domestic and foreign commodities. It merely allows imports to be inspected if they are found to be circumventing U.S. quality standards.

2. PESTICIDE MONITORING

The conference agreement contains a provision that I sponsored with Mr. DINGELL and several other colleagues to improve the Food and Drug Administration's [FDA] pesticide monitoring and inspection operations.

Inadequacies in FDA's pesticides inspection activities intensify U.S. consumers' concern about whether imported produce is safe to eat. On numerous occasions, the General Accounting Office [GAO] has documented the severe inadequacies in FDA's pesticides program. According to GAO, FDA tests less than 1 percent of all food shipments and uses laboratory methods that can only detect one-half of the pesticides available on world markets. Furthermore, GAO found that the average violation rate among imports was twice that of domestic products and that shipments containing illegal pesticides are often marketed and consumed, rather than being reexported or destroyed. GAO also found that financial penalties are frequently not imposed when shipments which violate U.S. standards are detected.

The provision included in the conference agreement is designed to enable FDA to target its limited resources to the types of crops, countries of origin, and specific pesticides where violations most often occur.

3. IMPORTED MEAT AND POULTRY PRODUCTS

The conference agreement also contains a provision to improve the inspection of imported meat, poultry, and egg products. This provision builds on recommendations from a February 1987 Office of Inspector General [OIG] audit which identified significant defiencies in imported meat inspection processes. Under the provision, the Secretary is required to report to Congress on action it will take to improve the inspection processes in response to the OIG audit.

4. ROSE STUDY

The conference agreement requires the ITC to conduct a study on how rose imports, the EC's tariff rate for imported roses, and other competitive factors have impacted the U.S. rose growing industry.

The problem confronting domestic rose growers has continued to worsen. Major foreign producers—Colombia, Mexico, Guatamala, Ecuador, and the Netherlands—are selling roses in the United States at prices that are unfairly based on dumping and foreign government subsidies.

Unlike other U.S. fresh-cut flower growers, however, rose growers have been denied relief as the result of repeated negative injury determinations from the ITC. Nonetheless, the import share of the U.S. rose market continues to expand. Imports of hybrid tea roses, the principal variety of rose imports, captured 44 percent of the domestic market in 1987, up from 31 percent 3 years earlier.

Significantly, import duties on roses in the European Community—24 percent for 6 months and 16 percent for the other 6 months—compared with a year-round rate of 8 percent in the United States, have the effect of diverting foreign roses to the United States—which without the high EC duties, would go to the EC market.

The agreement, therefore, directs ITC, notwithstanding its negative determinations in the past, to make a competitive study of the effects of imports, dumping and foreign government subsidies upon domestic rose growers.

Although it was deleted during the conference, the Gephardt amendment was necessary to open our eyes by raising the debate on improving the enforcement of trade laws in situations when other nations engage in unfair trade practices by raising barriers and invoking tariffs.

What did the Gephardt amendment really accomplish? It sent a clear signal to our trading partners around the world that the situation has become intolerable for our Nation. Everyone proclaims they are for free trade but not protectionism. Now we must put into place a system of checks and balances to ensure a fair international trading market.

Today, the Congress must stop the wildfire growth of our trade deficit with a real and pragmatic solution. Leadership is what our Nation has been lacking in international trade for the past 7 years and leadership is exactly what the Congress will be providing in passage of H.R. 4848. This type of omnibus trade measure displays the leadership our Nation is seeking in international trade.

I urge Members from both sides of the aisle to support this important piece of legislation. Unless we as a body take this leadership role in advancing America's trade policy, our economy will soon be outpaced by leaner, more foreward looking competitors. The challenge that lies ahead is our greatest opportunity for bipartisanship in the Congress and the executive branch in working together. We must create the climate that will allow domestic and international economic growth and prosperity over the long haul. Let's put H.R. 4848 into law and begin to pry open the foreign markets of the world in order that our Government will provide our good products, crops, and technologies with open markets overseas.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI].

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this motion to recommit with instructions.

From listening to some of the agruments of our opponents, there seems to be some misunderstanding on the nature of this provision. It truly is innocuous in many ways; there are no loopholes, from my reading of it, and there are adequate safeguards.

Passage of this motion will allow the deletion of a critical provision which provides only temporary relief for the Caribbean Basin ethanol producers. It goes to the essence of our CBI efforts to give vital economic help to our good neighbors.

The 1986 Tax Reform Act imposed a very onerous feedstock requirement on Caribbean Basin ethanol producers, and it had a chilling effect on production. This requirement runs counter to U.S. foreign policy and economic interests. Our Caribbean Basin Initiative has seen limited success, but ethanol is one industry whose establishment was clearly motivated by the CBI and by legislation that this House passed. By allowing this amendment, we are driving a fledgling industry into extinction, thereby defeating our own interests. We are sending a negative message regarding the sincerity of our support for economic development in the region of the Caribbean which is so important to the security interests of the United States.

CBI ethanol imports pose no threat to U.S. domestic industry. In 1987, imports of CBI ethanol were less than 3 percent of U.S. production. Furthermore, domestic production is not meeting increasing U.S. demand, and CBI imports actually help stabilize our supply that we have within our own country. Therefore, it does not hurt our domestic industry but more or less does help our supply.

The ethanol provision is vital and reasonable. It applies only through December 31, 1989, and it imposes a volume cap limited to 20 million gallons per facility. No way would this hurt the United States that has such a huge demand, for there is also a requirement for the International Trade Commission, as stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ANTHONY] just a few moments ago, and the GAO [the General Accounting Office], to study how current law impacts on the economic development of the CBI countries and to assess the effect that ethanol imports have on the U.S. producers.

We can act on this study at an adequate time in the near future. We must have the facts before us before we can make a sensible value judgment.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Members to vote against the motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Nebraska [Mrs. SMITH].

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time in support of the motion to recommit the trade bill with instructions to strike the ethanol provisions.

I supported passage of the conference agreement on H.R. 3, the original trade bill, because I believed the legislation, overall, offered our farmers and ranchers greater opportunity in the world marketplace despite certain objectionable provisions in the bill.

This motion to recommit gives us the opportunity to remove the most objectionable of those provisions and correct a problem for agriculture that runs counter to the overall intent of this protrade legislation.

The objectionable provision the motion would strike would allow certain companies to transship alcohol through the Caribbean for the sole purpose of exploiting the region's duty-free status.

The provision, if left in the bill, would weaken the economic incentive to establish a sugar-based ethanol industry in the Caribbean Basin by eliminating the requirement for the use of local feedstock for five trading companies. As a result, these companies are allowed to purchase heavily subsidized wine alcohol from Europe, send it to the Caribbean and then transship it to the United States for the purpose of exploiting the Caribbean Basin Initiative duty-free status.

Very little economic benefit for the Caribbean is derived from this process, and there are grave consequences for both American producers and farmers in lost markets and for the Federal Government in uncollected tariff revenues.

The beneficiaries are the European countries that are supplying the subsidized ethanol. They gain enormous economic benefit from avoidance of duty.

I am concerned that this provision will affect the growing ethanol industry in Nebraska and across rural America. The increased use of ethanol can help reduce our oil imports. As the dangerous situation in the Persian Gulf continues to grow, Congress should not forget the implications of ethanol for future U.S. energy security.

Six million bushels of corn are used each year to supply the Nebraska gasohol market. At this point, there are two proposed new ethanol plants in my State that would consume another 15 million bushels of corn a year.

Unless we can kill this provision by agreeing to Mr. MICHEL's motion, we may hinder these plans and seriously undercut our efforts to promote the development and use of gasohol.

I urge my colleagues to support this motion.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, anybody is free to quote the administration in any position on this issue. I know I have watched them. They have been all over the map. The time of reckoning is here.

Six months after the Caribbean Basin Initiative was passed, I was confronted by an industry in this country that said there was all this terrible ethanol going to come in from South America, or from Central America, because of a shortcut type of arrangement. I called a committee hearing, called witnesses from the administration, and found out that the administration had licensed the plant, had issued a written statement saying that the plant met the conditions of the Caribbean Basin Initiative. We dismissed the hearing and went on.

Mr. Speaker, five of those plants are to be built under this legislation. They will be limited to no more than 20 million gallons apiece, which is just less than rice or peanuts as far as the supply of ethanol in this country is concerned. It would be around 2 percent of the whole marketplace, hardly enough to wreck the price or the supply situation.

Second, the administration participated with us on reaching this temporary solution to the problem. They sat right there in the room with us. They were there. They did not object to the decisions, and we made what is in effect a temporary decision.

Mr. Speaker, let us now take the argument that this is subsidized ethanol or subsidized alcohol or subsidized input into the process. If that is so, then we have adequate laws in the United States to prevent that and to put on a countervailing duty against any subsidy that takes place here. The subsidy argument is wholly without merit. It just has no merit at all. It should be dismissed by any reasonable or rational person.

It is no real threat to the farmers of this country. It is less than 2 percent. It is limited. It is temporary. It is only doing justice to a program that has already begun.

Unfortunately the people in the Caribbean, everytime they find something they can do and begin to make a little money out of it, they run into opposition in the United States from one of our own interests here. We knew that was going to happen, but I did not think it would be on ethanol. Ethanol, I think, as all of you should know, is a highly subsidized product in the United States. None of us in this Chamber ought to complain about any foreign subsidy, because that is actionable, but for the highly subsidized ethanol industry to come in here and complain about 2-percent penetration is just plain ridiculous.

Mr. Speaker, the motion to recommit should be on all rational considerations voted down.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to make the point that we are not out here with any dilatory tactic to delay passage of this trade bill. The text of my motion to recommit is one that is with instructions to report the bill back to the House forthwith with the following amendment, and obviously that simply means that if the motion to recommit were to be adopted, the distinguished chairman would be obliged under that vote to report it back forthwith minus the ethanol provision. There would be no delaying tactic here other than time consumed in taking the vote.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and for making that point.

Mr. Speaker, for those Members who are curious, this motion to recommit is self-executing. It would remove the ethanol provision. The bill would be back on the floor immediately. There would be no delay in consideration of the bill as amended. I might also say to the gentleman, my colleague, from Arkansas, who earlier mentioned the Texas corn growers somehow liked these ethanol provisions, I might tell him and all of my colleagues that the National Corn Growers and the American Farm Bureau support the Michel-Durbin motion to recommit, and the reason we support it is fairly obvious. If we go along with the ethanol provisions in this bill for these five companies, we will displace desperately needed markets for American corn, up to 10 percent of the 1988 corn crop which could be displaced by this action in the trade bill. We will also eliminate a market for 250,000 tons of U.S. coal. We will lose 500 jobs in America's ethanol industry, 3,000 jobs indirectly related, and will dump 200 million gallons of highly subsidized European wine alcohol into the American market.

Mr. Speaker, let me also add that if this imported ethanol does not pay a duty, the taxpayers will pay the difference, $120 million in lost tariff revenues that we otherwise would have collected.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in making this a clean trade bill, one that helps workers and farmers. Vote for the motion to recommit.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, evidently the gentleman did not hear my remarks. If there is any subsidy in any of this, it can all be handled by the countervailing-duty laws that we have on the books, and that I hate to tell my friend is just a fallacious, factless argument. If there is any subsidy, they can be knocked out by countervailing duties.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, let me tell the gentleman that with this provision for 200 million gallons of imported ethanol we will lose 60 cents a gallon or $120 million in U.S. tariff revenues to our Treasury.

Mr. GIBBONS. If there is any subsidy in it, it will not come in except without an offsetting duty that will wipe out the subsidy, so the gentleman should just not, in all accuracy, use the subsidy argument.

Mr. DURBIN. I will suggest to the gentleman that it will cost us jobs, cost farmers income, and I urge my colleagues to support the motion to recommit.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, the distinguished Republican leader, for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished Republican leader for his creative work on this very important substitute amendment.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, at the start of the 100th session of Congress, the editorial writers and pundits predicted that the big issue in Congress would be trade. They were right. For the past year, the headlines and the backroom conversations around Capitol Hill have been about trade.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we take up H.R. 4848, an omnibus trade bill. A bill which could well be described as the new and improved H.R. 3 because it is improved from the product first considered in this Chamber last spring. And, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to rise in support of H.R. 4848.

First, Mr. Speaker, as you know, the President vetoed the H.R. 3, the omnibus trade bill. I had opposed this bill last spring when it came before the House because on balance the protectionist provisions outweighed the pro-trade provisions and I feared we were heading straight into a trade war. These included the Gephardt amendment which would have mandated retaliation against nations with large trade surpluses. This amendment would have been the first shot in an international trade war which would have crippled the economy in the Pacific Northwest. A second antitrade amendment was the so-called private rights of action. This amendment would have allowed one U.S. company to sue another if the latter company bought goods which were found to have been dumped by a foreign nation. The message here was that companies better not buy foreign goods or they leave themselves open to potential lawsuits. A third sneaky amendment was the so-called scoff-law amendment. This amendment would have barred importers who made half a dozen clerical errors on Customs service forms from bringing goods into the United States. Finally, there was the Bryant amendment which called for complete disclosure by foreign investors. While the goal sounds good, the results would have dried up capital investment in the United States.

As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee's Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, I helped write key provisions of H.R. 3 which were designed to help promote exports. Chief among these were provisions which would help U.S. exporters compete overseas by making the Federal Government a source of assistance rather than a source of obstruction. This meant expanding our foreign commercial service and providing better data to our exporters. It also meant reforming our export control laws. These tired and outmoded regulations which stop our technology based industries from competing in the international marketplace. According to the National Academy of Sciences, U.S. export control laws cost our exporters $9 billion in new sales each year. Some of the companies losing markets are located in the first district and amendments I drafted will help them regain lost markets.

As a member of the conference committee working on H.R. 3, I did my best to help eliminate the protectionist provisions and keep the proexport provisions in the final bill. When the conference was over, the protectionist provisions were gone and the proexport provisions so important to the Pacific Northwest remained and I voted for the bill when it was returned to the House.

Mr. Speaker, when the President's veto was sustained in the Senate, a wide spectrum of organizations and individuals called for a new stripped down trade bill. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee introduced H.R. 4848. This bill contains all of the provisions in H.R. 3 except those identified by the President in his veto message.

H.R. 4848 is a protrade bill. It is not a protectionist bill. It contains important provisions necessary for our businesses to operate in the international economy like the harmonized customs system. It contains provisions which allow our Government to continue to negotiate trade agreements. And it contains important provisions which will help retain displaced workers. The bill also contains important provisions to help teach our children foreign languages, as well as math and science skills.

Mr. Speaker, today we also took up a plant closing bill. The news media report that the Democratic leadership intends to hold this trade bill hostage to the fate of that bill. Mr. Speaker, this is an unwise idea. Each bill should stand on its own merits. We know that a trade bill with a plant closing provision will be vetoed and that veto will be sustained in the Senate. Let us move this bill now. It should not be held hostage.

Mr. Speaker, I have gone from being a critic of this bill because it was overtly protectionist to a supporter because it is now protrade. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4848 and I urge the President to sign it into law.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Chairman, I raise in opposition of the motion to recommit the Omnibus Trade Act of 1988 with instruction to strike the ethanol provision.

When Congress approved the CBI, the stated intent was to bring political and economic stability to the region. As a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I had an opportunity to listen and participate in the process of creating the CBI. The production of the Caribbean ethanol is within the scope of our intentions. Yet, even when Caribbean ethanol was in production, not one Caribbean country had a surplus balance of trade.

U.S. investors and CBI countries, in reliance on the CBI Act invested several million dollars in the ethanol industry. Many of these facilities are not just distillation towers. Rather these facilities own and operate sugarcane fields and have constructed full fermentation facilities.

Caribbean ethanol production brings jobs and therefore economic stability to the region. For example, the Petrojam project alone has provided 2,500 jobs in Jamaica and 1,500 in Belize. When completed the Petrojam project will employ, both directly and indirectly, approximately 12,000 people. This is very significant in the case of Jamaica and other Caribbean countries.

Caribbean Basin ethanol imports accounted for less than 4 percent of U.S. consumption in 1987. In 1987 there was a shortage of ethanol in the coastal States. According to Alcohol Update, and Alcohol Week, industry journals, "as many as 100 to 200 million gallons of ethanol production may be forced to shut down by late summer because of the drought." But more importantly, CBI ethanol could substantially boost the domestic industry market share in coast gasoline markets where sales have been historically low because of the lack of supply from the Midwest. Supply interruptions and shortages erode market confidence to the detriment of U.S. agriculture.

Many domestic ethanol industry supporters have acknowledged that ethanol supplies from the CBI would be a valuable complement to Midwestern gain ethanol supplies. For example, Texas Corn Growers Association, by letter from Carl King to Senator BENTSEN.

Washington Post editorials of May 13, 1988, and May 31, 1988, support the retention of the ethanol provisions in the omnibus trade bill. Moreover, the editorials point that "The domestic ethanol producers want to keep the ethanol market for themselves. American corn producers are in a strange state of mind. While they adamantly insist on open markets abroad for their grain, the simultaneously insist, equally adamant, on closing their market here against even the faintest hint of competition." They can't meet demand in the United States much less in coastal States. They can't have it both ways. I urge you to reject the recommittal motion.

The ethanol amendment in the trade bill is limited and reasonable. It applies on through December 31, 1989. It imposes a volume cap of 20 million gallons per facility. Currently, only one facility is in operation. It requires an ITC and GAO study on the impact of CBI ethanol producers on the domestic industry. By its terms, the ethanol provision in the trade bill does not permanently change current law.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time other than to thank the distinguished gentleman from Florida for making the request initially, and obviously the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES WEEK

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 539) designating the week beginning September 18, 1988, as "Emergency Medical Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as one of 218 cosponsors of House Joint Resolution 539 I want to express my appreciation to the sponsor of the bill to designate September 18, 1988, as "Emergency Medical Service Week."

With the frequency of travel, the growing number of older residents, the increasing number of cars on the road, the increase in the amount of violence and crime, and other aspects of living in the world as it is today, we owe a debt of gratitude to those assisting emergency medical service teams who serve the public in saving lives.

Though we have made great strides in medical equipment and technology, without the men and women who make up these emergency teams—physicians, surgeons, nurses, paramedics, educators and administrators—we would not be able to manage these emergencies in the prompt, efficient manner that we do today.

I am pleased to mention that in my State of Maryland, the State maintains the University of Maryland Medical System Corp., which includes the shock trauma unit, the Maryland Institute for Emergency Medical Services Systems [MIEMSS], Poison and Drug Information Center, Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Institute and other such education and research institutions.

The effect of this resolution will be to educate the public about accident prevention and precautions. I urge swift passage of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 539

Whereas the members of emergency medical services teams devote their lives to saving the lives of others;

Whereas emergency medical services teams consist of emergency physicians, nurses, emergency medical technicians, paramedics, educators, and administrators;

Whereas the people of the United States benefit daily from the knowledge and skill of these trained individuals;

Whereas advances in emergency medical care increase the number of lives saved every year;

Whereas the professional organizations of providers of emergency medical services promote research to improve emergency medical care;

Whereas the members of emergency medical services teams work together to improve and adapt their skills as new methods of emergency treatment are developed;

Whereas the members of emergency medical services teams encourage national standardization of training and testing of emergency medical personnel and reciprocal recognition of training and credentials by the States;

Whereas the designation of Emergency Medical Services Week will serve to educate the people of the United States about accident prevention and what to do when confronted with a medical emergency; and

Whereas it is appropriate to recognize the value and the accomplishments of emergency medical services teams by designating Emergency Medical Services Week: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning September 18, 1988, is designated as "Emergency Medical Services Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL POW/MIA RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 453) designating September 16, 1988, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mrs. MORELLA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of House Joint Resolution 453, which will proclaim September 16, 1988, as a day of remembrance for our brave American heroes still missing in Southeast Asia. The distinguished gentleman from New York, the subcommittee chairman, Mr. SOLARZ, is to be commended for his diligence in keeping this issue alive in this Chamber and before the eyes of the Nation. I also commend our colleague from California, the chairman of our House Task Force on POW's and MIA's Mr. LAGOMARSINO, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for the leadership they have rendered on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, this is the 16th consecutive year that I have supported this legislation in the House. I am hopeful that 1988 will prove to be the last year that this legislation will be warranted. Hopefully, within the next 12 months, we will finally have achieved a full accounting of the last of our 2,399 missing heroes.

In this Chamber, many of our colleagues have joined with us shoulder to shoulder in fighting on behalf of our POW's and MIA's for the past 16 years. During the decade and a half since the end of American involvement in Indochina, we have endured just about every type of adversary possible on the political battlefront: an apathetic public; disinterested bureaucracts; uncaring administrations, and general public unawareness.

During the past 8 years, however, we have been blessed with an administration that has not tried to sweep the POW/MIA issue under the rug. The issue is now afforded, the top priority status that it has long deserved.

Regrettably, the progress made under our hard-nosed approach has been slow and long in coming. But, there is no doubt that progress is indeed being made.

Just this week, another 25 sets of remains, which appear to be of missing Americans, have been repatriated by the Hanoi Government. In recent years, hundreds of other sets of remains have been returned, ending years of uncertainty and doubt on the part of loved ones. Several years ago, American teams were finally allowed to personally make onsite inspections of known crash sites. Of course, none of us will rest until all Americans are accounted for.

We are convinced and grateful that the Defense Intelligence Agency is working diligently on a 24-hour basis to resolve this issue. We are grateful that the White House has not allowed this issue to die. We are especially grateful to the National League of Families for keeping the flames of hope lit since the early 1970's, and for never wavering for a minute in their diligence and determination to keep this issue alive. We also thank the VFW which never once wavered in its support for their missing brothers in arms. The American Legion, the National Committee for POW/MIA Rights, and many other groups throughout the nation that have fought for our POW's and MIA's are deserving of our credit.

One of the most bittersweet burdens to carry on this issue is the change in attitude of many Americans. While 10 years ago we were concerned about their apathy, today there is cause for concern because well-meaning Americans—with big hearts and compassion as wide as the prairies—do not understand the complexity of the issue.

It is heart rendering to receive letters from school children not old enough to remember our Vietnam experience first hand who question why we simply don't send some marines over to free our American prisoners.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you agree that if it were that easy very few in this Chamber would oppose its implementation.

But in reality, the only viable means of bringing our American heroes home is by way of government-to-government negotiations. There is simply no viable way that we can pinpoint Americans in a jungle-infested, mountainous area larger than Texas without tipping our hands to the Communists.

Sending any "Rambo" type operation to Southeast Asia would only initiate an endless cat-and-mouse game with no result in the end.

Instead of supporting any idealistic paramilitary action Americans everywhere should be united behind our administration in its hard-nosed negotiations. The economies of the Communist nations of Southeast Asia are in the stone age. As they become more and more desperate to become a part of our 20th century, our hand is strengthened at the bargaining table.

And this, Mr. Speaker, underscores the importance of the resolution before us. It is more important than ever that we let the Communists of Southeast Asia know that we Americans remember. It is important too to let them know that we are united. And it is important to let them know that we are impatient—that we want a full accounting and that we want it now.

National POW/MIA Remembrance Day, which will be approved for September 16 if we approve House Joint Resolution 453, will be an appropriate time for schools throughout our nation to hold educational programs on our involvement in Southeast Asia, and on the importance of remembering our missing Americans. It would be an appropriate day for our veterans organizations to hold commemorative services in honor of our missing Americans. It would be an appropriate time to pay homage to General John Vessey, who as President Reagan's special envoy on this issue, has displayed a quiet raw courage that has made us all proud to be Americans.

Equally important, is using POW/MIA Remembrance Day to let our fellow Americans know that we can not forget.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, let us celebrate September 16, 1988, as a solemn day of determination and unity, to all to get behind our Government's efforts and to reunite all Americans in our resolve to achieve a full and final accounting.

We can do no less for those who gave so much.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] is quite right when he says we must keep this issue before us.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] who is the chairman of the POW/MIA task force.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the House Task Force on the Missing in Action, I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting House Joint Resolution 453, which designates September 16, 1988, as National POW/MIA Recognition Day. This National Day of Remembrance is a very important signal to the Vietnamese and the rest of the world that we continue to care about the fate of our missing servicemen in Indochina and will not let this issue die. I commend Chairman DYMALLY, ranking member Mrs. MORELLA, Chairman SOLARZ, POW/MIA task force cochairmen GILMAN and SOLOMON, Chairman MONTGOMERY and all who have worked on this issue.

I believe that greater progress toward bringing our brave missing servicemen home can be made, despite the numerous obstacles we have yet to surmount, so long as we provide the same solid determination we have already demonstrated. Patience is a difficult but necessary factor when dealing with the Vietnamese. However, I believe our patience and determination is beginning to pay off. The path ahead of us is clear and there is reason to hope for progress. As Senator JEREMIAH DENTON told the participants of the POW/MIA Recognition Day Program at the Capitol in 1986, the worst feeling a family endures is that of "not knowing"—not knowing if their brother, son, or father is dead or alive, in captivity or in hiding. President Reagan has taken the lead on this issue, making the resolution of these questions a top national priority. I know the House task force, Asia-Pacific Subcommittee Chairman SOLARZ and I have joined the President, the League of Families, VFW, American Legion, and others, in our commitment to these missing servicemen's proud but longing families.

This National POW/MIA Recognition Day will provide concerned citizens with a foundation from which to hold programs and awareness projects on behalf of America's POW/MIA's in Southeast Asia. Through this special day, America will officially broadcast its will to remain steadfast with our courageous POW/MIA's and their families and will keep the faith. We will use the symbol of this Friday in September to underscore our commitment and reaffirm that "we will not forget." I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this resolution and keeping the POW/MIA issue at the forefront of public concern on this special day and the days that follow until there is the fullest possible accounting for our missing servicemen.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] for his remarks and also for chairing the House Task Force on the POW/MIA's.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] who chairs our Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

□ 1800

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this joint resolution which designates September 16, 1988, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day."

I commend the gentleman from California and the gentlewoman from Maryland for giving us the opportunity to vote on this resolution, as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. Speaker, as you know, for many years I have worked on the MIA issue and tried very hard. In fact, I just returned from a recent trip to Hanoi which was my ninth trip into North Vietnam. We were working on this issue of the MIA's. We tried to point out to the Hanoi government, as we have done in the past, that it is very, very important that we get all the information that government has about those Missing-in-Action. We are entitled to that information. We brought them files. We showed them copies of Americans that we need answers for, and I do hope that the Hanoi government will move forward on this.

We are entitled to these answers. I think this resolution fits right in to show the leadership in North and South Vietnam that we are concerned and we do want something done about the Missing-in-Action.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. MORELLA. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the distinguished gentleman, the chairman of our Veterans' Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] for his continuous long devoted efforts in attempting to achieve a full accounting.

I recall when Chairman MONTGOMERY established the Select Committee on Missing-in-Action back in the middle 1970's, and some of us served with him. We made several trips to Hanoi and conducted numerous hearings in an attempt to achieve a full accounting. Despite the fact that that committee closed up shop back in the late 1970's, Chairman MONTGOMERY has continued in his efforts to help bring about a final accounting. For that I know our hearts go out to Chairman MONTGOMERY for his continual diligent efforts in this direction.

Mrs. MORELLA. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON].

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, just last weekend I met with my Vietnam veteran groups back in Berrien County, the home county where I am from in St. Joe and Benton Harbor. We had people from all over southwestern Michigan come to this meeting that I attended.

I would also like to commend the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY]. I had an extensive chat with him just last week about this as well.

These MIA's should not be forgotten. In my meetings just last week with the State Department officials, I know that we have a delegation right now tonight in Hanoi trying to find out just where the remains are and what the status of these fine gentlemen that served our country so well are. With more than 2,400 still missing in action, I think this Nation needs to make every effort to get to the bottom of the mystery that still haunts us.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in very strong support of this measure, as a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 453, to keep the pressure on as these men should never be forgotten.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, it is a privilege for me to speak in support of House Joint Resolution 453, a bill to designate September 16, 1988, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day."

At least 72,000 veterans of America's wars live in the Eighth Congressional District of Maryland, which I represent. Some of these veterans served their country as prisoners of war, and this resolution recognizes our debt of gratitude to these service members and civilian personnel, especially those who served in Indochina.

We also remember by this resolution those who are listed as missing in action from the Vietnam conflict. It is my hope that we will settle this issue with speed and consideration for the men and their families who have waited many years for them.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this resolution which designates September 16, 1988, "National POW/MIA Recognition Day."

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my distinguished colleague, Mr. DYMALLY, for bringing this important resolution to the floor in such an expeditious manner.

For the past several years, National POW/MIA Recognition Day has been commemorated across the Nation, with appropriate ceremonies and activities on the local, State, and national levels. This year, veterans groups and family organizations have asked the Congress to designate September 16 as National POW/MIA Recognition Day.

This resolution, which is noncontroversial and has tremendous bipartisan support, underscores our debt to American servicemen who fought bravely for our country, yet tragically remain unaccounted for in Indochina. The resolution also supports the firm commitment of the President to resolving this issue as a matter of the highest national priority. In addition, the resolution recognizes the sacrifice made by those who were imprisoned in Indochina as well.

By adopting this resolution, we also recognize and honor the families of missing Americans for their continued sacrifices and courage. The loyalty and valor of America's servicemen and women is truly one of our greatest resources and sources of pride of the American people.

POW/MIA Recognition Day increases public awareness in the United State that our Government will never cease its efforts on behalf of the POW/MIA's until we receive the fullest possible accounting for the 2,398 missing men in Indochina. We consider this to be a fundamentally humanitarian issue of great concern to all Americans.

Furthermore, the adoption of the resolution will send a clear signal to the Governments of Vietnam and Laos that the Congress and the American people are unified in the urgency we place on resolving this lingering issue.

Since August of last year, when Presidential Emissary General John Vessey met with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Thach in Hanoi, we have made some progress on this issue, which we hope will be expanded significantly in the near future. Today in Hanoi, the Vietnamese are repatriating 25 remains of missing Americans. This is the fifth time since the Vessey mission that remains have been returned.

I am encouraged by these positive developments, and I am sure that by adopting the resolution we are considering, we let the Vietnamese and Lao know the great importance we attach to the fullest possible accounting of the sons, brothers, fathers, and husbands who remain missing.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, today the House of Representatives will consider House Joint Resolution 453, a resolution designating September 16 of this year as National POW/MIA Recognition Day.

This resolution pays tribute to the servicemen, servicewomen, and civilian personnel who answered their country's call during the conflict in Southeast Asia. Perhaps more importantly, it sends an important reminder to the American people and a critical message to the Governments of Vietnam and Laos: American MIA's have not and will not be forgotten by this or any Congress.

The wounds of the Vietnam war are not healing easily. Pressing for a resolution to the MIA issue is a positive way to continue our Nation's healing process as we search for answers to unresolved questions and seek to ensure that future generations will be able to live in peace.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking member of the Committee on Veteran's Affairs, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 453, designating September 16, 1988, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day," and I am honored to be a cosponsor of this legislation.

For each of the past 15 years legislation such as this has reminded us here in the Congress that we can not rest until this issue is resolved. Young Americans went to Southeast Asia to protect the freedom and democracy that we enjoy today. Many of them gave their lives, others returned with disabilities that they continue to fight. We owe them our gratitude for their service and I am happy that in recent years we have shown them the appreciation they truly deserve.

We have not and will not forget these young men who never returned, however. This legislation recognizes these men and also the anguish that their families and friends continue to suffer in not knowing their fate.

We can be proud of the strong efforts President Reagan has made to account for these men. We must continue, however, to work to resolve this issue and to account for those men still missing in action.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting House Joint Resolution 453, and through it, our missing soldiers and their families.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 453

Whereas the United States has fought in many wars;

Whereas thousands of Americans who served in those wars were captured by the enemy or are missing in action;

Whereas many American prisoners of war were subjected to brutal and inhuman treatment by their enemy captors in violation of international codes and customs for the treatment of prisoners of war, and many such prisoners of war died from such treatment;

Whereas many Americans are still listed as missing and unaccounted for, and the uncertainty surrounding their fates has caused their families to suffer acute hardship; and

Whereas the sacrifices of American prisoners and Americans missing in action and their families are deserving of national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That September 16, 1988, is designated as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to recognize that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LYME DISEASE AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 569) designating June 12 through 18, 1988, as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DIOGUARDI], a very special colleague of ours who is the chief sponsor of House Joint Resolution 569 designating July 24 through 30, 1988, as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week."

Mr. DIOGUARDI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Lyme disease is a bacterial disease transmitted by the pinhead size "deer tick." Reported cases of the disease are on the rise. In 1976, there were three diagnosed cases of Lyme disease. Last year Westchester County, NY, alone, which I represent, reported 545 cases of Lyme disease.

The disease is often called the great imitator because its symptoms mimic other diseases, like rheumatoid arthritis. Its capacity to imitate other ailments frequently leads to its being misdiagnosed. While we know of the reported cases, there could be many more cases that go unreported due to the unique imitating nature of Lyme disease.

Lyme disease can be prevented by taking certain precautions and, if transmitted, its impact can be easily minimized by medication if diagnosed early. Left untreated, the disease can produce chronic debilitating side effects.

The key to conquering Lyme disease is to raise public awareness. By passing House Joint Resolution 569 and establishing the week of July 24 as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week," the House is taking a giant step toward bringing Lyme disease under control.

Mrs. MORELLA. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we do call attention to this disease. It is becoming more and more prevalent and people know so little about it, so I thank the gentleman from New York for sponsoring the resolution.

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, as the Member of Congress representing the area with the most cases of Lyme disease in the country, I am delighted that the House has approved legislation designating the week of July 24 through 30 as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week."

Lyme disease is a bacterial infection that is spread by a very small tick, called the northern deer tick. Most of the reported cases in the United States have come from New York State. However, Lyme disease is no longer thought to be a regional problem of a few northeastern coastal States. It has become one of the fastest growing infectious diseases in the United States with more than 6,000 cases diagnosed in 35 States. In fact, many scientists believe that if it were not for AIDS, Lyme disease would be the No. 1 new disease facing us today.

Lyme disease is sometimes called the Great Imposter because it can mimic the symptoms of other diseases. It may go untreated because its symptoms are sometimes mistaken for those of other illnesses, such as ringworm, arthritis or heart disease. Symptoms of Lyme disease in its early stages include a characteristic rash at the site of the tick bite, headaches, fever, and swollen glands. Left untreated, Lyme disease can cause partial facial paralysis, meningitis, encephalitis, an abnormal slowing of the heartbeat, severe depression, arthritis of the joints, memory loss, chronic fatigue and numbness or shooting pains in the arms and legs. Because Lyme disease was only first recognized in the United States in 1975, physicians who do not see many cases of the disease may have difficulty in diagnosing and treating it. However, with proper diagnosis and early treatment, Lyme disease is curable.

As early treatment of Lyme disease is the key to warding off its worst effects and as there is no vaccine for Lyme disease, the best defense against it is prevention. Prevention depends upon public awareness of the dangers of this tick-borne disease. For this reason, I prepared a brochure entitled "Lyme Disease: A Long Island Challenge," and mailed it to 153,000 of my constituents. The purpose of my mailing was to increase the public's awareness about preventing Lyme disease and recognizing the early symptoms of it. I am greatly pleased by the results of the distribution of this information. Already two people have contacted me to let me know that because they received my mailing on Lyme disease they recognized the symptoms of the disease. Their physicians tested and confirmed the presence of the Lyme spirochete in their blood. Clearly, this mailing has achieved the goal of public education.

Congressman DIOGUARDI and I have been busy educating our colleagues about the dangers of Lyme disease. I am delighted that 218 Members have joined us in cosponsoring legislation to designate "Lyme Disease Awareness Week." I want to thank them for their support in bringing this disease to the attention of the American public. Senator MOYNIHAN introduced the companion legislation in the Senate and has garnered the support of 56 of his colleagues. The Senate is expected to approve this legislation tomorrow. Mr. Speaker, it is hoped that the designation of the week July 24 through 30 as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week" will help to make the general public and health care professionals more knowledgable of Lyme disease and its debilitating side effects.

LYME DISEASE: A LONG ISLAND CHALLENGE

DEAR FRIEND: Lyme disease, a bacterial infection spread by very small ticks, is a serious public health concern for eastern Long Island. More than 60% of the cases reported to the New York State Department of Health came from Suffolk County. Moreover, most of the nearly 6,000 officially recorded cases in the United States have come from New York State.

Lyme disease is sometimes called the "Great Imposter" because it can mimic symptoms of other diseases. You may not know if you have been bitten by the Deer Tick because it is so tiny, and the symptoms of Lyme disease may not be easily recognizable. The disease may go untreated because its symptoms may be mistaken for another illness. Physicians may have difficulty in diagnosing Lyme disease. However, with proper diagnosis and early treatment, Lyme disease is easily curable. Lyme disease is not fatal.

As the tick season draws near, I want to share important information with you about how this disease is spread, what to do if you are bitten by a tick, and how Lyme disease can be treated. I hope you will find this information to be useful. In addition, the Suffolk County Department of Health has put together an informative booklet on Lyme disease. I would be happy to send you a copy of this free booklet. Please contact my Centereach office at (516) 689-6767.

Sincerely,

GEORGE HOCHBRUECKNER,
Member of Congress.

SUFFOLK COUNTY REPORTS MOST CASES OF LYME DISEASE

Lyme disease is the most common disease transmitted by ticks in the United States. It was originally discovered in Sweden at the turn of the century, and first recognized as a distinct disease in the United States in 1975 when a cluster of cases occurred near Old Lyme, Connecticut. Thirty-two States are now reporting cases of the disease. More cases of Lyme disease have been reported from Suffolk County than from anywhere else in the world.

Lyme disease, caused by a corkscrew-shaped bacteria, is spread in our region by the Northern Deer Tick. This tiny tick lives in brush and trees along shores and in woodlands. Despite its name, the deer tick will feed on almost any mammal. In fact, the most common animal host for this tick is not the deer but the common field mouse. In some areas of Suffolk County, virtually 100% of deer ticks carry the spirochete responsible for Lyme disease.

RECOGNIZING THE 3 STAGES OF LYME DISEASE

The First Stage: After a tick bite, which frequently goes unnoticed, the earliest evidence of infection is usually the development of a skin rash at or near the bite. This rash can migrate to other parts of the body to form satellite rashes. This rash occurs in two-thirds to three-quarters of the patients who acquire Lyme disease. Although it can vary in its appearance, the rash usually takes one of three forms: a uniformly red area; a "bull's eye"; and a red rim with a clearing center. The rash is usually a couple of inches in diameter and can expand to encompass an entire torso, arm or leg. Although usually painless, it may cause itching or be mildly painful. The rash typically begins within days or weeks after the tick bite. However, it is important to remember that most victims of this disease never realize thay have been bitten by a tick. The rash may last only a few days, or it may persist for a month or more. Physicians who are not familiar with Lyme disease sometimes mistake it for another type of insect bite, or as evidence of some other disorder, such as ringworm. The rash may often go unobserved when it occurs on the back or scalp.

The early stage of Lyme disease is frequently accompanied by flu-like symptoms: aches and pains, fever, headaches and severe fatigue. It is easy to treat Lyme disease in its early stage. The rash is a definitive sign of Lyme disease. If you develop what you think could be Lyme disease, consult your physician promptly. Your physician can determine if you have Lyme disease and can begin appropriate treatment. If not treated, the rash and all other symptoms usually disappear, but other more serious health problems develop later as the disease progresses.

The Second Stage: This stage has been characterized by acute neurological disorders. In those individuals who do not recognize the rash or who go untreated, the spirochete spreads throughout the body to produce a wide variety of problems. Acute neurologic abnormalities or acute cardiac abnormalities occur four to six weeks after infection in up to 20% of patients. The neurologic disorders associated with Lyme disease are:

Bell's palsy, a weakness on one side of the face characterized by the inability to smile or close one's eye on the affected side;

Meningitis, the inflamation of the sheaths covering the brain and spinal cord;

Encephalitis, the inflamation of the brain tissue; and

In rare cases, dysfunction of one or more of the 12 cranial nerves resulting in hearing loss, blindness, and a change in or loss of smell and taste.

Another possible secondary stage manifestation is slowing of the heartbeat known as heart block. This abnormal slowing of the heartbeat causes dizziness or fainting. Very rarely, inflammation of the heart muscle (myocarditis) occurs, impairing the ability of the heart to effectively pump blood throughout the body. However, even in this event, Lyme disease is not fatal.

The Third Stage: This is perhaps the most insidious stage of all. It is most easily recognized by the onset of arthritis, which mainly affects large joints, especially the knee. However, arthritis can affect smaller joints such as those of the wrist and hands. Arthritis occurs in about 50% to 60% of the patients who go untreated. For some, this may be the first warning of Lyme disease. Another aspect of late Lyme disease is a syndrome characterized by chronic severe fatigue, short-term memory loss, and dysfunction of peripheral nerves (numbness or shooting pains in the arms and legs).

TREATMENT OF LYME DISEASE

Lyme disease can be successfully treated at any stage. The earlier the disease is determined and treated the better the chances are for an uncomplicated recovery. Antibiotics are the treatment of choice for Lyme disease. The best way for a physician to diagnose Lyme disease is to see the rash. In the absence of this rash, diagnosing Lyme disease can prove difficult.

If you would like additional information on Lyme disease, please call one of the following Lyme Disease Hotlines:

Suffolk County Department of Health at 348-2755 or the County Office of Health Education at 348-2836.

S.U.N.Y. at Stony Brook Lyme Disease Clinic calls are accepted between 1:30 PM and 5:00 PM weekdays at 444-3808. For immediate medical information call 444-2344.

Southhampton Hospital Hotline at 232-1450. For immediate medical information call 283-2600.

LYME DISEASE PREVENTION

Avoid brushing against plants and trees.

Avoid touching wild animals.

Check pets regularly for ticks; tick collars may help reduce the number of parasites pets carry.

If you live in or travel to areas known to be infested, check clothing and yourself carefully, especially legs, arms, head, neck, and ears for ticks or signs of rash.

RECOGNIZING THE CARRIER TICK

The Lyme disease carrying deer tick, Ixodes dammini, is brown or black. The deer tick has been described as being "the size of a period in a story on a newspaper page." Its maximum diameter ranges to about one-sixteenth of an inch across. Nymph stage deer ticks are smaller still and are the most active of all deer tick and the most likely to bite and transmit the disease.

Tick season: Deer ticks are most prevalent in summer and fall. Peak activity occurs during July.

REMOVING TICKS

Directly grasp any tick with tweezers, as close to the skin as possible.

Firmly but slowly pull the tick straight out.

Do not twist, jerk, or crush the tick.

If the tick is stubborn and refuses to loosen its grip, smother it in petroleum jelly. This cuts off the tick's oxygen supply. The tick becomes distressed and will loosen its grip of its own choice to move away to seek oxygen.

If the mouth or head of the tick breaks off and remains beneath the skins, consult your physician.

Never kill a tick that is burrowing into the skin.

Save the tick after removal in a jar for positive identification.

Wash your hands. Douse the tick bite area with an antiseptic.

Special thanks to Dr. Raymond Dattwyler, head of the Lyme Disease Clinic at University Hospital, Stony Brook, for his assistance in the preparation of this report to increase Lyme Disease awareness.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 569

Whereas Lyme disease is spread by the tick species Ixodes Dammini by means of the bacterium Burrelia Burgdorferi;

Whereas these ticks are no larger than the head of a pin;

Whereas these ticks can be carried by domestic animals such as cats, dogs, and horses;

Whereas these ticks can be transferred from domestic animals to humans;

Whereas Lyme disease started in southeastern Connecticut and has spread to 32 States;

Whereas the Center for Disease Control has reported 6,000 cases of Lyme disease since 1982;

Whereas Lyme disease is easily treated in its early stages by an oral vaccine administered by a physician (penicillin and erythromycin for young children and tetracycline for persons allergic to penicillin);

Whereas the early symptoms of Lyme disease are a rash, mild headaches, a slight fever, and swollen glands;

Whereas Lyme disease often mocks rheumatoid arthritis and heart disease;

Whereas if left untreated, Lyme disease can cause severe depression, brain disorders, and even death;

Whereas the best cure for Lyme disease is prevention;

Whereas prevention of Lyme disease depends upon public awareness; and

Whereas education is essential to making the general public and health care professionals more knowledgeable of Lyme disease and its debilitating side effects: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That June 12 through 18, 1988, is designated as "Lyme Disease Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title amendment offered by Mr. DYMALLY: Amend the title so as to read: "joint resolution designating July 24 through 30, 1988, as 'Lyme Disease Awareness Week'.".

The title amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL WEEK OF RECOGNITION AND REMEMBRANCE FOR THOSE WHO SERVED IN THE KOREAN WAR

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 318) to designate the week of July 25-31, 1988, as the "National Week of Recognition and Remembrance for Those Who Served in the Korean War," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mrs. MORELLA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, as the House of Representatives moves to consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 318 designating a national week of recognition and remembrance for those who served in the Korean war, the feelings of this Member are best summed up as ones of elation, gratitude, and great pride. As one of the three original cosponsors of this long overdue legislation and as a Korean war veteran, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 568 and to express my gratitude to all of those who are responsible for moving this legislation forward.

Just 2 weeks from today, on July 27, 1988, countless Americans will celebrate the 35th anniversary of the cease-fire agreement that brought to a close the active combat of the Korean war; 5.7 million American servicemen and women saw service during the Korean war—more than 54,000 of whom made the ultimate sacrifice. These brave men and women, their families and their friends, made many sacrifices in a successful effort to preserve for the Korean people the ideals which form the very foundation upon which our great Nation is built—namely, freedom and self determination.

Until October 12, 1986, this group of American patriots were labeled "The Forgotten Veterans." More than 30 years after the end of the Korean war, this group of veterans remained as the only such group not to be honored with a memorial in our Nation's capital in recognition of their service and their sacrifices. It was on that date that the House of Representatives, by a vote of 406 to 0, agreed to H.R. 2205, legislation which authorized the design and construction of such a memorial. I am pleased to report that to date, nearly $2 million has been received from private sources for that purpose.

The passage of Senate Joint Resolution 318 is the logical next step in our efforts to address this Nation's 35-year-old oversight. A "National Week of Recognition and Remembrance for Those Who Served in the Korean War" will also help to focus the Nation's attention on the effort to fund the construction of the Korean War Veterans Memorial. I urge passage of this legislation and commend it to my colleagues and to the Nation.

Mrs. MORELLA. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia. Members may recall that my husband is a veteran of the Korean war, too.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. MORELLA. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia.

My husband also is a veteran of the Korean war. They have had some strong feelings that they have really been forgotten, so I appreciate this very much, and thank the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, as the author of the House companion to Senate Joint Resolution 318, I am pleased that we are considering this important resolution. I thank the committee and the 220 cosponsors for their assistance in bringing this resolution to the floor to call attention to the contributions made by those who served in the Korean war.

My resolution designates the week of July 25 to July 31, 1988, as "National Week of Recognition and Remembrance for Those Who Served in the Korean War." It is an effort to express our appreciation to those brave individuals who participated in this war to ensure freedom and independence for the Republic of Korea.

I was joined in introducing House Joint Resolution 568 by my colleagues, STAN PARRIS and MARY ROSE OAKAR as well as Senator ARMSTRONG. This year marks the 35th anniversary of the armistice agreement which was signed on July 27, 1953, to end the Korean war. It is fitting that we take this opportunity to call attention to a war that has, for the most part, been known as America's "Forgotten War."

Mr. Speaker, over 5.7 million American service men and women were involved in the Korean war. Our casualties were staggering. During this period 54,246 died, 103,284 were wounded, and 8,177 were missing or taken prisoners of war. As of today, 329 prisoners of war remain unaccounted for.

And yet, there are no national memorials to those who served in Korea, nor days of honor set aside to remember them. Despite this, we should never forget the sacrifices that were made by those brave men and women who answered their Nation's call and proudly served their country and democracy.

In 1986, I authored the law which directs that a national memorial be built in Washington, DC, to do honor to those who served in Korea. A special site on the Mall has been selected and solicitations for designs and funding are progressing.

A series of events are now being planned by the Korean War Veterans Memorial Advisory Group in conjunction with veterans organizations including the Korean War Veterans Association during the week of July 25. These events are intended to call attention to the sacrifices made by those who served in Korea. Importantly, this resolution calls on all agencies to fly their flags at half mast during the week of July 25 in order to honor those who made the ultimate sacrifice and lost their lives in Korea, fighting for their country and for freedom.

I urge my colleagues to support this important resolution.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 318

Whereas on June 25, 1950, the Communist army of North Korea invaded and attacked South Korea, initiating the Korean War;

Whereas the week of July 25-31, 1988, includes July 27, the 35th anniversary of the cease fire agreement that ended the active combat of the Korean War;

Whereas the Korean War was brought to an end primarily through the efforts of the United States Armed Forces;

Whereas for the first and only time in history a United Nations Command was created, with the United States as the executive agent, to repel this invasion and preserve liberty for the people of the Republic of Korea;

Whereas, in addition to the United States and the Republic of Korea, twenty other member nations provided military contingents to serve under the United Nations banner;

Whereas, after 3 years of active hostilities, the territorial integrity of the Republic of Korea was restored, and the freedom and independence of its people are assured even to this date;

Whereas over 5.7 million American servicemen and women were involved directly or indirectly in the war;

Whereas American casualties during that period were 54,246 dead, of which 33,629 were battle deaths, 103,284 wounded, 8,177 listed as missing or prisoners of war, and 329 prisoners of war are still unaccounted for;

Whereas, although the Korean War has been known as America's "Forgotten War", this nation should never forget the ultimate sacrifice made by those who fought and died in Korea for the noble and just cause of freedom;

Whereas the Congress and the President of the United States have enacted a law authorizing the establishment of a Korean War memorial in the Nation's Capitol to recognize and honor the service and sacrifice of those who participated in the Korean War;

Whereas increasing numbers of Korean War veterans are setting aside July 27, the anniversary date of the Armistice, as a special day to remember those with whom they served and to honor those who made the supreme sacrifice in a war to preserve the ideals of freedom and independence; and

Whereas on this significant anniversary of the cease fire which started the longest military armistice in modern history, it is right and appropriate to recognize, honor, and remember the service and sacrifice of those who endured the rigors of combat and the extremes of a hostile climate under the most trying conditions and still prevailed to preserve the independence of a free nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of July 25-31, 1988, is designated as the "National Week of Recognition and Remembrance for Those Who Served in the Korean War". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities, and to urge the departments and agencies of the United States and interested organizations, groups and individuals to fly the American flag at half staff on July 27, 1988 in honor of those Americans who died as a result of their service in Korea.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the several joint resolutions just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DROUGHT CONDITIONS IN MICHIGAN'S FOURTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Upton] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to inform my colleagues of the extent of this year's drought in southwestern Michigan and to provide them with some suggestions which the farmers that I represent have given me for effective relief legislation.

My district, Michigan's Fourth Congressional District, has an extremely diverse agriculture base. Farmers grow everything from apples to zucchini, produce everything from wheat to wine and raise all types of livestock and poultry. This diverse commodity base produces a strong and resilient agricultural economy even in some trying times, but this year's drought is going to put an unprecedented strain on the rural economy of southwestern Michigan.

I would urge Members, particularly on the Committee on Agriculture, that are this week considering a markup on drought legislation, to take the time and to study very carefully legislation that will provide some relief. It was only yesterday that we heard from the USDA on the number of acres that were planted, and it will not be until early next month that we will know what the yields on those acreages will produce.

In recent weeks I have seen firsthand the devastating effects of the drought on farmers of southwestern Michigan. Last Friday I spent the day visiting a number of farms in different counties throughout my district. I talked with more than 100 farmers, and my agricultural advisory committee as well, growing all kinds of crops and raising a variety of animals who shared with me their concerns and suggestions on how to deal with this unprecedented disaster. No portion of the Fourth District's agriculture base or its rural economy will escape the effects of the drought and the heat. Every crop has been damaged. Annual crops like corn and soybeans will be devastated this year; perennial crops like apples, cherries and blueberries will suffer damage that will last for years to come. I talked with a number of blueberry farmers who are losing their blueberry bushes by the row, and it will take them 8 years to come back. That is how long it takes a new blueberry bush to mature.

Livestock, dairy, and poultry farmers right now are experiencing higher grain costs, and they worry about running out of feed in the months to come. Even farmers who irrigate are finding their water sources running dry and themselves running ragged from around-the-clock moving and maintenance of normally supplemental irrigation systems. One of my farmers, Bob Thompson, from Vicksburg, MI, said that if one more person congratulated him on having irrigation he was going to commit assault and battery.

Some of my hog farmers in Cass County, MI, the largest hog-producing county in the State of Michigan, are being absolutely devastated. Why? Their hogs are getting dust pneumonia. When driving by one of these farms, there is actually an 8-foot cloud of dust hanging over that farm, and the hogs have no escape at all.

The entire rural community in southwestern Michigan is bracing for hard times. Implement dealers and Main Street businesses are already seeing less business from farmers worried about crop losses. Lenders are noting an increased demand for short-term money, and many short-term loans are being extended. However, without additional funds in the pockets of farmers, many of these notes will not be paid.

I am encouraged by recent congressional efforts to enact fair, comprehensive and effective emergency relief measures. Clearly Federal drought relief legislation is needed, but the task will be difficult, and we must be careful in crafting a legislative proposal. Assistance should be offered, but it must not bloat the budget deficit. In addition, it must be carefully targeted to farmers who experience crop and income losses of the magnitude which can only be offset by Federal help.

The farmers with whom I visited were as interested in fair and efficient Federal assistance as they were in receiving some Federal help. They repeatedly emphasized that Congress should not change the basic provisions of the 1985 farm bill. The farm bill is working as it was intended, and it should not be altered at this time.

Drought relief legislation should be just that, relief for losses caused by lack of rainfall this year.

The recommendations are these: They have urged that any program Congress devises should, first, supplement, not replace, existing disaster relief programs such as Federal crop insurance. The crop insurance program has been expanded in recent years with the purpose of providing help at just such times as these. Any new Federal aid should not penalize the cautious and prudent farmer who purchased crop insurance this spring.

They also agreed that aid should go fairly to all affected farmers.

Many of the farmers I have spoken to believe that if growers of program crops are going to receive assistance, nonprogram crop producers should be helped to the same extent.

Livestock producers emphasized that the present emergency feed assistance programs (the EFAP and EFP programs) are of limited help to farmers who do not grow their own grain. These programs need to be made available to all livestock producers in counties with reduced feed stocks.

A helpful suggestion was that relief efforts be coordinated and centralized in one agency to reduce paperwork, duplication, and confusion. New disaster legislation could include a provision to set up emergency response committees in each affected county, composed of the ASCS director and the ASCS county committee, and representatives from the Cooperative Extension Service, FmHA, commercial lenders, crop insurance, and a State agriculture department official. At least one person must be familiar with the major nonprogram crops grown in each county.

Finally, everyone emphasized that Congress must take the time to carefully outline its intent, especially if it approves, as expected, a new disaster payment program. As you recall, in 1986 Congress passed a disaster payment program to help farmers who suffered losses from drought and flooding that year. That program has been plagued by inadequate monitoring, insufficient funds, and loose bookkeeping. Some Michigan farmers received payments for 1986 disaster losses only last week, nearly 2 years after the floods which caused their losses. We cannot be satisfied with a program that pays farmers 2 years late, and we must devise sufficient appropriations authority to cover the full amount of relief assistance.

Michigan's Fourth District farmers believe we need legislation to help farmers cope with the production and economic losses caused by this year's heat and drought. I offer my colleagues their suggestions on how to devise a legislative package that is compassionate, yet fair, efficient and timely. Thank you for giving them the attention they are due.

KIDNAPED: HOME EQUITY LOAN SAFEGUARDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Annunzio] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Reserve recently conducted a survey revealing that home equity loans now account for more than $75 billion of total consumer debt. Three million homeowners have obtained these loans. The House of Representatives has acknowledged the growing use of home equity loans and has attempted to address the problems that consumers encounter with them.

On June 20, 1988, the House passed H.R. 3011, the Home Equity Loan Consumer Protection Act of 1987, under suspension of the rules. This passage indicates that these consumer protection provisions have widespread support in the House. The bill was also incorporated in its entirety in the Depository Institutions Act of 1988, legislation which addresses the restructuring of the banking industry.

Like the House, the Senate has shown interest in home equity protections by attaching provisions its bank restructuring bill. Unfortunately, it appears that these worthy provisions are, in a sense, being held hostage by the Senate.

As reported in Congressional Quarterly (June 25, 1988), Senate Banking Committee aides have indicated that no separate home equity legislation will likely be considered by the Senate until the House acts on the bank restructuring issue. While I am well aware of the Congress' efforts to address the possibility of restructuring the banking industry, home equity consumer protection legislation should certainly not be held for ransom. The victims of this kind of political maneuvering are, of course, the consumers.

Home equity loans have become increasingly popular in this decade. According to the Federal Reserve, 1 percent of the home equity loans which exist today were established in 1982, while 76 percent were established in 1986 and 1987. The lines of credit for these loans generally average about half of the homeowner's equity, though lenders usually allow as much as 70 to 80 percent.

A situation which has concerned me for some time now is that Americans seem to have developed a tendency toward accumulating debts. The most frequent use for home equity loans is to pay off other debts, such as credit card debts or automobile loans. I am concerned that consumers are not always fully aware of the dangers of being debt-ridden. For this reason, it is vitally important that lenders clearly and accurately disclose the terms of home equity loans to consumers. The homes of the borrowers are the collateral for these loans, and losing one's house is a possibility which creditors often neglect to discuss with borrowers.

The Home Equity Consumer Protection Act which was passed by the House contains several consumer safeguards which deserve further mention. The bill generally prohibits creditors from unilaterally changing the terms of the loans. Creditors may call in loans only under the following circumstances; fraud or material misrepresentation on the part of the consumer; failure by the consumer to meet the repayment terms of the account agreement; or any other action or failure to act by the consumer which adversely affects the creditor's security interest for the loan or rights in such security. Further, lenders offering variable rate home equity loans are required to use a rate index which is publicly available and not under the control of the lender.

The House deserves praise for its speedy consideration and passage of this much needed legislation. The fact that H.R. 3011 has been included in the Depository Institutions Act of 1988, as well as the fact that it was able to stand on its own merits, reveals the strength of this proposal. It is my sincere hope that the Senate will recognize the importance of these provisions and will give H.R. 3011 a chance to become law on its own.

Consumers should not have to depend upon the passage of a much broader, more complex, and more controversial bill for home equity loan safeguards. There is nothing to lose and a large amount of consumer protection to gain in passing this bill, as the actions of the House confirm.

WATSONVILLE ELKS LODGE CELEBRATES 75TH ANNIVERSARY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the attention of my colleagues the upcoming 75th anniversary celebration of the Watsonville Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

The Elks have been one of the outstanding community groups in the Watsonville area, providing assistance to numerous causes and helping to improve the quality of life in the area. I would like to describe for the House some of their contributions.

The Elks provide major support to Scouting and athletics programs, including baseball, football, and basketball. They are very active in the local Drug Awareness Program and have worked with local school administrators in making drug-awareness presentations at each of the 21 local elementary schools. They also provide financial support for Elks Therapy Programs for children with physical disorders. In addition, Watsonville Elks members contribute annually to the Elks National Foundation, which awards college scholarships to worthy high school graduates. They also participate in programs offered to veterans in the Veterans' Administration hospital in Palo Alto, such as fishing trips, dinners, and entertainment.

Mr. Speaker, the officers and members of the Watsonville Lodge of Elks deserve our commendations and support. In 75 years, they can truly say and their predecessors have made a difference, and I am confident that they will continue for another 75 years to make the same kind of outstanding contribution to the lives of the people of Watsonville and, through their national Elks activities, the entire country.

JUDICIAL REVIEW BILL FOR VETERANS INTRODUCED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlemen from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, today, at the request of the American Legion, Representative GERALD SOLOMON, ranking minority member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, and I are introducing a bill to provide for judicial review of rulemaking by the Veterans' Administration, to provide for the payment of reasonable fees to attorneys, and for other purposes. Neither of us has endorsed this legislation nor any other judicial review measure.

There are other pending bills that would provide judicial review for veterans in one fashion or another—H.R. 639, S. 2292, and the bill that was approved by the Senate on Monday, S. 11. I had previously given notice that, should the Senate approve a judicial review bill this session, I would schedule hearings and, following those hearings, would provide an opportunity for a judicial review to be considered by our committee.

To fulfill that commitment, I have scheduled a hearing for September 8 at 9:30 a.m. in room 334 of the Cannon House Office Building.

The Veterans' Affairs Committee, in the 99th Congress, held extensive hearings on the issue of judicial review of veterans' claims. Therefore, to expedite consideration of pending measures, we will hear from a limited number of expert witnesses.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MacKAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MacKAY. Mr. Speaker, due to a previous commitment, I missed several votes. Had I been able to vote, I would have voted against the motion to recommit H.R. 4800 and for final passage of H.R. 4800.

I appreciate having this opportunity to state my position on these measures.

SOCIAL SECURITY LAW ABOUT TO BE AMENDED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of high-visibility events occurring in the next few weeks, and for that reason the populace of the country as a whole and even the Members of this House and the other body are likely to forget that there is a very important process going forward in one of the conference committees.The Social Security law is about to be amended. A conference committee of the House and Senate are meeting to consider amendments to the Social Security law. Most people would say, "How can you do anything to the Social Security law and it not be a big event and all America not be watching?"

We are not watching because we call it welfare reform. Most people do not realize that welfare reform is an amendment of the Social Security law, that aid to dependent children is covered under the Social Security Act, that welfare is a part of a set of programs which were developed during the New Deal era to allow people to survive in America no matter what their condition, no matter what their set of circumstances might be. This Government committed itself to help people survive, and it did that in many ways, not just the provision of old-age pensions. It did it in many ways. We have survivor insurance for young people whose parents were on Social Security and deceased; we have aid to dependent children. Aid to dependent children is the target of the present reform process.

We are going to amend the Social Security law in that area. It is a very important process going forward, the House and the Senate meeting in conference to consider H.R. 1720, which was passed by the House as its version of how the Social Security Act should be amended with respect to aid to dependent children, and the Senate bill, S. 1511, which was passed in the Senate.

These bills are radically different, radically different not only in the amount of money that will be made available to implement the program, with the House being almost twice the amount as the Senate, but also step by step in each central provision the Senate bill represents a far different concept with respect to reform than the House bill.

It is very important that we take a close look at what is developing and what is likely to develop in the conference committee process. In addition to the Senate bill being regressive and punitive and oppressive, in addition to the Senate bill wiping out benefits that have existed for 50 years, and ignoring major problems that exist with respect to Social Security, the social security of children, the Senate bill also has another important force behind it. The President of the United States keeps making it quite clear that he will veto any bill that is not to his liking. He is very concerned about even more punitive measures than the Senate bill has. He wants to spend even less money than the Senate bill has.

Mr. Speaker, this H.R. 1720, which many of us reluctantly voted for because we felt that there has to be reform, at least this represents an approach which has a humane intent at the center of it, an approach which will emphasize jobs, an approach which will emphasize education and provide the money for jobs, training, and education. We voted for H.R. 1720, and H.R. 1720 is in danger of being wiped out completely and S. 1511 instead will be the replacement.

S. 1511 has another very important factor going for it. The House of Representatives voted last week by a substantial margin to instruct the conferees to accept the amount of money in the Senate bill as the amount of money that would be attached to the ultimate welfare reform bill, so we have President Reagan, and we have the majority of the House, even those Members who voted for 1720, who decided that they wanted to save money above all.

We have a thousand ways to save money in this Congress, but we do not look to those ways. We have a $1 billion ship in the Persian Gulf that shoots down the wrong planes, and we could save money by bringing them home. We could also save our own foreign policy. We have FBI agents who are cruising libraries looking for spies. We could save money by taking the FBI agents out of the libraries; we could take the same FBI agents and assign them to the Pentagon and more rapidly end the corruption and the waste there which is a multibillion-dollar corruption and waste.

We can save billions of dollars, but we do not prefer to look at those obvious ways of saving money. We do not prefer to look where the money really is. We are not as smart as Willie Sutton when he was asking why he robbed banks. He said, "That is where the money is." We do not look in the Congress to the places where the money really is. We look instead at those programs where people have no power. The people who have no power will be closely scrutinized. They will be investigated again and again, but where the money really is in the Pentagon; for example, we have to have a blunder; we have to stumble upon the fact that there is massive corruption in the Pentagon, that they are selling plans and secrets on a wholesale basis.

Somebody stumbled into that, and an investigation got going. What they have revealed already is what has been happening in the Pentagon to waste our money which has been going on since the very beginning of this administration, and that a very high-level person is probably connected with it.

We are willing to put all of these things together and recognize that if we want to save money, take the FBI agents and put them on the trail of the people who are selling Pentagon secrets, take them out of the libraries. The FBI agents in the libraries cannot really discover much, because all of the material in the libraries is available to the public. The libraries purchase that material on the open market, so the Russians or whoever wants to get our secrets, technological secrets, whatever the FBI has determined they are looking for, can go and buy them on the open market.

It appears also that they can go also and buy our secrets, our most cherished secrets in the Pentagon, on some kind of market, black market, consultant underground market, and that is where the FBI should stop the flow of our secrets and save us money in the process.

The whole bidding process, the whole corruption that goes on every time there is an obvious scandal, we hear speeches being made by the people in charge that we definitely need reform. They are now trying to get ahead of everybody else and say, "We always told you we need reform." It is impossible with these processes to be constructed as they are and there not be waste and there not be corruption, but we are not preoccupied with that in Congress. We do not have any bill to deal with that. There has been no aggressive attack. We do not even use the right language. Nobody calls it stealing.

Over and over again we hear them talk about the misconduct in the Pentagon. Nobody has talked about a threat to national security because of their selling secrets to each other. They are not necessarily going to confine their selling to the people who are most patriotic. They will sell to the highest bidder.

We are in the process of not speaking and acting honestly about the things that we say we consider most important.

□ 1830

Saving money is most important. When the welfare reform bill is on, we want to squeeze it down to the last penny and save every penny. But we are not concerned about saving money when it comes time to look at where the money really is, in the Pentagon.

We had a base closing bill which was debated for quite a long time because in 10 years we have not closed a single military base where we obviously could save money. But when it comes to people who are poor, the recipients of AFDC who have no power, we are ready to beat up on them and squeeze as much as we can out of them.

The people who were the target of this amendment to the Social Security Act, the dependent children, are grossly discriminated against. What we have not talked about as we consider this welfare reform amendment to Social Security is the fact that there are nearly 7 million children who are recipients of Aid to Dependent Children and who have in the last 10 years received a cut in their allocations in terms of buying power, of the money they receive, and they have gone down 33 percent, that is 7 million children who are covered by Aid to Dependent Children in the Social Security law.

On the other hand, here is another group of children who are covered by the Social Security law, those children covered in the Social Security law in the Survivors' Benefits Insurance Program. They are the same American children as the children covered in the Aid to Dependent Children law. They have received increases in the last 10 years up 53 percent. It has gone up 53 percent so that now the children who are covered under the Social Security Survivors' Insurance are getting more than $350 a month, about $390 a month average for children under the Social Security Survivors' Insurance law, while on the other hand under the Aid to Dependent Children they receive an average across the country of $150; $150 versus $390. These are the same children. They are all Americans. What is the difference?

Most of the children under the Aid to Dependent Children are children who are black, or Hispanic, minority children. They have no power. They have no power.

I think the first step in any welfare reform which generally is interested in justice would be to address itself to the discrepancy between the amount of money received by children in one part of the Social Security Act and the amount of money received by children in another part of the Social Security Act. But this is not on the agenda, gets no consideration whatsoever.

As we go to the Democratic Convention also it might be interesting to note that in the platform of the Democratic Party there is not much attention being paid to what is happening to welfare reform. Not much attention is being paid to some other issues that relate very directly to the ability of poor people to survive.

On the minimum wage bill, we have been talking behind the scenes for quite a number of weeks about a minimum wage bill that would increase the minimum wage just 50 cents between now and January 1989. For this paltry 50 cent increase we are not able to guarantee enough votes to guarantee passage.

If we really want to talk about welfare reform, let us look at the fact that once we put people to work, and that is the theme of welfare reform, let us put people to work, get them off the welfare rolls, would they then make enough to survive? The minimum wage is not enough to survive. The minimum wage does not bring home enough for a parent with a child to survive.

We also have a bill called the ABC bill, which is for day care, a massive day care bill which would actually provide child care for those women who do want to go out and work, but do not have anywhere to leave their child. We have a parental leave bill which has completely disappeared. There is no discussion of it now anywhere in any significant circles in terms of putting it on the floor of the House, and yet that would provide mothers with an opportunity after children are born or when children are sick to be able to take care of them better.

Of course we have a plant closing bill that does at least begin to talk about treating people humanely when you throw them out of work. But in general, there are a number of issues that relate to the survival of the people on the bottom who need help from their Government which are not being discussed at all. No, instead we are focusing on H.R. 1720 and S. 1551 which are talking about ways in which we can squeeze this group of people who receive aid to dependent children. How can we squeeze them and show the public that we are saving money? How can we perpetrate in essence a fraud on the public, because if we really wanted to save money, there are other places to save money. But this group has a great emotional attachment to them. Everybody wants to see people get off welfare and go to work. Everybody wants to see that happen.

The Governors of the States of this country have talked for quite a long time now and they have pushed very hard to get welfare reform as a priority on the agenda of the Congress and the President. They have worked very hard. In fact, H.R. 1720 represents the best of the thinking of the Governors of the country. They pushed very hard because it is a highly visible political issue and they want to save money.

If they really wanted to save money and have more money for their States, again the Governors ought to organize their own committee to oversee the way in which the Pentagon contracts are awarded, or I can give them 15 or 16 other places in our Government and our bureaucracy where they can look for where the money is to save really large amounts of money. The Governors know this is a highly charged and emotional issue. You can win votes by screaming about putting people to work who are on welfare.

Let us take a look step by step at what is happening between H.R. 1720 and S. 1511. Let us look at the benefit improvements first.

At the start of the 100th Congress we were told that there was an emerging consensus on welfare reform, and in that consensus liberals would accept more draconian working requirements and conservatives would accept improvements in the criminally low AFDC benefits that are offered in most States. Let me repeat that. There are criminally low AFDC benefits offered in most States. Human beings cannot survive on the money offered in most States per child. That is the reason why we have the great discrepancy between the children on AFDC who receive an average of $150 a month, and the children who are on Social Security survivors' benefits. The Social Security survivors' benefits are paid directly by the Federal Government at a level which has been determined will guarantee the survival of a child, provide enough food, clothing and shelter. We do not care what happens to the 7 million children across the States who are being forced to survive on criminally low benefits.

The conservatives said that they did care, they would be willing to yield. As the process has progressed, however, the already stringent work requirements have gotten worse. The liberals, in other words, have agreed to more draconian work requirements, but the promised benefit improvements have gone from the meager to the meaningless. The conservatives, in other words, have not yielded at all in terms of steps to increase the amount of money that children have to survive on.

It is not clear that any bill enacted this year will not include any significant benefit improvement at all. They will not be in any bill enacted this year. Any bill enacted this year will have the worst kinds of draconian work measures and the least benefits, because it is under the pressure that I talked about before. It is under the pressure of the White House. Our President says he will not sign a bill unless it has draconian, the most punitive work requirements, and also has the cheapest price tag. That is the kind of pressure that the conference committee is laboring under.

They also have a vote which was taken in the House which says we want to come back closer to the Senate figure, regardless of what that means in terms of human misery. The whole process, the whole discussion of a national minimum benefit, a benefit similar to the one in the survivors' insurance section of the Social Security Act, has been dismissed.

When the House welfare reform bill was first introduced and discussions first started, it included a provision which established a national minimum AFDC benefit level that all States would be required to meet. This is needed to not only address the dramatic erosion in benefits—the benefits have dropped an average of 33 percent in value since 1970, as I said before—but also the wide disparity in benefits from one State to another. A mother with two children in Tennessee receives $4.54 a day, $6.48 a day in Kentucky, and $12.26 a day in Kansas. However, the Federal poverty guidelines say that a mother needs, in order to take care of a child, $24.25 a day. That is necessary in order to meet the minimum needs of the child, $24.25 a day, versus what Tennessee gives at $4.50, Kentucky at $6.48 a day, and Kansas, the most liberal I have cited here, $12.26 a day.

A national minimum benefit would still give States wide latitude in setting their own benefit levels, but it would assure that no State fails to meet the minimum basic needs of families with children who depend on AFDC benefits to survive.

My colleagues know we have children out there who are wards of the Government and they are receiving not enough food to provide for their proper growth and development, and they become various kinds of problems later on. The idea of a national benefit is not a wild, radical idea that has just been proposed. During the 1970's, President Nixon pressed for and he won enactment of a national minimum benefit for food stamps and SSI for the elderly and the disabled in response to widespread concern about the inadequacies of these benefits in some States. That was under President Nixon in 1970.

Those folks who say that poor people, certain categories of people who have no one else to go to except to the present Democratic Party platform and who look to the Democrats for progress should take note. There have been some unusual things happening for the people on the bottom in prior administrations that were not necessarily voted in by those people. In 1979 the House passed a $3 billion AFDC benefits improvement bill that would have set a minimum AFDC benefit. Though it had the support of such conservatives in the Senate as JOHN DANFORTH and then Senate majority leader Howard Baker, the bill was not acted on by the Senate. In 1979 I think my colleagues know the Democrats were in control of the Senate.

This Congress was supposed to be the Congress in which the bold step would be taken and a minimum benefit would become law. That was one of the ways they sold the whole idea of beginning the discussions of the welfare reform legislation. But it did not even make it out of subcommittee. The provision was deleted from H.R. 1720 and was replaced by some modest financial incentives to encourage States to at least make sure that AFDC benefits did not erode any further and kept pace with inflation. So the child who must survive in Tennessee on $4.54 a day will receive, if this legislation passes, some assurances that the $4.54 a day, which is already way behind the $24.25 a day that is necessary, will be increased in accordance with inflation.

The Senate, on the other hand, did not even try to include this token effort. Although many Senators talked a great deal about how shamefully low AFDC benefits are, they did nothing in their bills to address this problem. So you have a pressure on in the conference where even this protection for that erosion of the $4.54 a day will not be guaranteed because of the fact that the Senate bill, the cheaper bill, is the one that is likely to be the model and have most of its features retained after the conference effort is over.

Let us talk about another issue, coverage of the unemployed two-parent family. We talked about this for quite a number of years. In 24 States, unemployed two-parent families cannot receive any AFDC benefits no matter how poor they are.

□ 1845

The only way these families can get any help at all from the Government meeting their needs is for the father to leave home and for the family to break up. In communities across the Nation, fathers who are laid off from their jobs and cannot find work after they have used up their 26 weeks of unemployment benefits, have been forced to abandon their wives and children in order to have their wives and children fed. Everyone from Stuart Butler of the rightwing Heritage Foundation to the National Council of Catholic Bishops agree that this is a destructive antifamily policy which must be changed. In the 1979 benefits bill and again in 1985 and 1986, the House passed legislation requiring all States to extend AFDC to unemployed two-parent families without controversy.

The Senate and the White House at that time refused to go along. The welfare reform bill passed by the House last year again called for extended AFDC assistance to all two-parent families leaving it up to the States to decide how poor they must be to qualify for aid or how much aid they could receive.

The Senate welfare reform requires States to extend AFDC to unemployed two-parent families for just 6 months, just 6 months of the year and only if one of the parents "works off the benefits in a workfare job."

States that now offer unemployed parent benefits without any work requirements would also be required to force all of their unemployed parent recipients to work off their benefits.

The Senate bill, in other words, does not improve the benefits. It is worse than current law. It is more punitive than current law.

Let us take a look at mandatory work requirements. Under current law, all able bodied mothers of children ages 6 and up must participate in a job training program or they must work off their benefits in a workfare job in order to receive aid to dependent children. Most do not; most of the able bodied mothers of children ages 6 and up do not participate in such a program. Why? It is not because they are lazy, it is because the Federal Government and the State governments have refused to provide enough money to serve even a majority of the mandatory participants. In many States, even those who actively seek job training cannot get help.

The House bill changes this law to require that mothers of children ages 3 and up and even down to age 1 if the State wants to do it, must participate in training or take a workfare job for up to 20 hours a week in order to receive AFDC or for their children to receive Federal help. Mothers of school-age children will be required to participate full time.

At the same time, however, the House recognizes the fact that as of right now and in the past, the problem has been that there has been no money for job training or for jobs, workfare jobs for these participants. The House bill provides unlimited matching funds to the States for training and work programs.

That is for every AFDC recipient, the mother has to go to work, there will be a program, there will be an education program, there will be a job training program paid for on an entitlement basis, that is going to be provided.

The Senate bill, on the other hand, expands the mandatory participation requirement still more. Mothers of preschool children and those down to age 1, if the State wishes, will be required to participate for up to 24 hours a week in a training program or a workfare job and full time in an education program. But unlike the House bill, the Senate bill sharply limits what can be spent on education and training programs to between $500 million and $1 billion while at the same time imposing participation quotas on every State. Every State must have a certain number of people participating; requiring the States to enroll up to 22 percent of their mandatory participants and 100 percent of their unemployed parent participants in training activities or workfare jobs by 1993.

What the Senate bill means is that fewer resources will have to be spread over many more people; fewer dollars must serve many more people and that insures that no recipient will get the kind of meaningful education or training that they need to find work.

There are jobs available, jobs are available for people with certain skills, who have certain kinds of education and training. But in this Senate bill the money will not be provided.

Reluctantly I voted for H.R. 1720. When it passed the House I saw the opportunity to have a back-door jobs bill.

We had been unable in the last 7 years to get a meaningful job bill passed; but this could be a back-door jobs bill. We could provide jobs to people through this entitlement provision. It would allow for the financing of education programs, job training programs and even some on-the-job training programs. That would be getting through the back door of welfare reform what we have always felt was necessary and will be very useful, the Job Training Program.

Now the Senate has wiped out that provision.

There will be no significant amount of money, no impetus for job training programs.

Mandatory participation is based on a self-serving lie. We continue to put forward and perpetrate this lie that the unemployed do not want to work and will not work unless they are forced to do so. Half of the AFDC recipients stay on welfare for less than 2 years; less than one-sixth stay on for the 8 years which is often cited.

Many of those on it, if provided with a job will be happy to get off, as has been demonstrated in case after case when jobs are provided.

By forcing the AFDC recipient, the poorest of the poor, to work off their benefits, we require them to do something we do not ask anyone else who gets Federal help to do. We spend more on direct payments to farmers to keep them afloat than we do on AFDC benefits, but we do not ask farmers to work off their benefits. We are going to spend $15 billion, almost twice the amount of money we spend on AFDC, to bail out the Texas savings and loan industry but we are not going to ask the bankers to work off the money. When we, in fact, do not even require convicts in Federal prisons to work off all the money we spend for their room and board. But we want money which goes to children, the parents of those children to work off the benefits.

Mandatory participation will harm those whom AFDC is designed to help: children. It is not possible to punish parents who refuse to work. The myth that you can take away a portion of the benefits which are provided for the parent taking care of the children and not hurt the children is just that, a myth. It is not possible to punish parents who refuse to work by cutting welfare benefits and not also hurting their children. For political reasons we continue to pretend that when a parent is santioned and monthly benefits are cut, it really does not affect the children because the grant is only reduced by the amount of need that is supposed to go to the parent. This is idiocy. If you cut aid to a household you hurt everyone in it.

A sanctioned parent who decides whether the child gets food or not, a sanctioned parent does not suddenly stop eating. That parent will not deny herself food. The likelihood is that for the duration of the sanctions that parent will give less food to the child.

A sanction does not stop a landlord from evicting the entire family when they do not have the money to pay the rent. The entire family goes.

As a result, the children definitely suffer. The children will go hungry, the children will be denied necessary shelter and will be denied clothing. Whatever that money was to buy, the parent is not going to just cut—will not abide by the rules and only cut what they were losing as a result of sanctions.

In most cases, these sanctions will be imposed for no good reasons.

The theory is that benefits will be cut only when someone absolutely refuses to participate. But in the real world, they are more often imposed as a result of misunderstandings, letters lost in the mail and other bureaucratic foulups.

For example, since just 1985, 30 percent of the people required to participate in New York City's welfare work program have been sanctioned. Of this 30 percent, 98 percent of those sanctioned were later put back on the rolls because they admitted they had made an error.

The sanctions were unjustified or the sanctions were as a result of an error.

Hearings were held and they determined in those hearings that the bureaucracy was at fault and not the people who had been sanctioned.

The Senate welfare bill also does not offer any meaningful training. Mandatory participation might be acceptable if meaningful job training and education programs were going to be offered. It is now clear, however, that any reform bill enacted this year will not offer that kind of help. Instead, it is going to hurt the AFDC recipients by not giving their parents the training.

Take education, for example; lack of education is the greatest obstacle to self-sufficiency for most welfare recipients. In New York City, an estimated 17 percent of AFDC recipients read at or below eighth grade level, one-third read below the fifth grade level, but only a fraction of those who want to enroll in an education program are able to do so.

At this time there are enormous waiting lists of welfare recipients who want to enroll in educational programs but the money is not there to provide for the programs.

Though education is definitely the greatest need, we all admit, from liberals to conservatives, we all understand it is the greatest need of welfare recipients, this is the problem which receives the least attention from New York and almost every other State in the Nation.

The House bill tries to correct this problem. It tries to correct this inexcusable lack of attention to education. It requires that States offer every participant who does not have a high school diploma the opportunity to participate in an educational program which addresses their educational needs before they are required to enroll in any other program.

In other words, education needs must be met first. You cannot pretent that there are jobs out there which exist for a person who cannnot qualify for those jobs. You must meet their educational needs first and the House bill requires this and provides the money for it.

The Senate bill, on the other hand, differs little from the present law. It requires that States offer some kind of educational service to participants without a diploma but only if the participant is under age 22. Most adult welfare recipients are not under age 22.

In requiring that this be offered, it is only if the State has an available slot in an existing educational program.

Even then, only if the State decides that it is appropriate for these people to go to school. And if a participant does not do well in school, the State can force them to drop out and take a workfare job or do something else instead.

In other words, under the Senate bill, a State can offer educational services to only 25 participants at a time and still comply with the law. Someone who cannot even read or write can be forced, through this method, into a workfare job for years while they are waiting for an educational slot to become available, to become vacant.

Let us take a look at the workfare program, what they call community work experience.

Under current law, States can force AFDC receipients to work off their benefits in unpaid government jobs for as long as they remain on welfare. Only nine States now have such programs. However, we only have nine States for one important reason: They find it does not work. It does not help anyone find a real job.

All of the research on this workfare program, community work experience program, all the research tells us that the program does nothing to help get people off welfare. States have tried it and they have abandoned it.

In many cases, workfare assignments are demeaning make work jobs such as handing out flyers on street corners, filling soap dispensers and wandering around parking lots washing cars. In many cases, they are more effective at humiliating people rather than building the skills they need to find a job.

In other cases, the State and local governments have used the workfare program to displace and to undercut the wages of State and local government employees by forcing the workfare participants to perform jobs usually performed by civil servants and for which they should be paid a regular salary, such as in New York City where the civil service jobs of pest control aides and custodians are now being done for free by workfare participants.

The best example of the fundamental unfairness of workfare is the case of one Michigan man who lost his job making $13,000 a year as a dog catcher. When the Michigan city had to make a budget cut, he lost his job but he got his job back under CETA for $9,000 a year and then after CETA was eliminated, he was ordered to do the same job once again under the workfare progam and this time $6,000 was his annual welfare payment.

In other words, this man is now doing the same work he has always done, only now he is receiving less than half the pay. He went from $13,000 a year down to $6,000 under workfare. We should take a close look at what we are doing and consider the words, "involuntary servitude" when we have programs of this kind.

We can enslave our own population when we have programs of this kind.

The House bill reforms workfare to eliminate some of these abuses in the program and it tries to insure that it is only used in ways which help recipients to build skills that they will need to get a real job, an ongoing regular job.

□ 1900

Dead end, make work jobs are prohibited. Every workfare assignment must develop marketable skills or be integrated into a regular training program which does provide for those skills.

In the House bill, only those recipients who really need some kind of work experience would be assigned to workfare. Those who already have some work experience but need job training or education or help in locating a real job could not be forced into a workfare assignment, but instead job training and education or job placement would be provided.

Workfare assignments would no longer be open ended and would be limited to a maximim of 3 months for 30 hours a week or 6 months if the number of hours of work was based on the size of the grant in the House bill.

The weak protections against the use of workfare to steal the jobs of regular workers would be significantly strengthened along the lines of the kind of protections which now govern work experience and on-the-job training provided under the Job Training Partnership Act. Equal pay would have to be paid for equal work. If an AFDC recipient was assigned to do exactly the same job being done by a regular employee, he would have to be paid the same wages.

The Senate bill, on the other hand, takes a completely different approach. Rather than reforming the one program we know does not help AFDC recipients achieve self-sufficiency, it expands this program; it expands workfare. Whereas only nine States have found that it works and found that it is worth keeping and a minority of counties and cities in other States now use it, the Senate bill would essentially require every State, every county and every city to immediately establish large workfare programs.

There would be no limitations on these workfare programs. Workfare assignments would not have to develop any skills. They could be any dead-end, make-work assignment the bureaucrats can think of. The jobs could go on forever; there would be no time limits. An AFDC recipient could take a job from a regular civil servant. They would not have to be given equal pay. They could sit side by side with a regular government employee doing exactly the same work but get far less in wages.

Mr. Speaker, there are numerous organizations that supported H.R. 1720, the bill that passed the House, and those organizations are opposed to S. 1511. Those organizations are opposed to a conference process which is going to guarantee that S. 1511 is the kind of bill we get. We are going to get the provisions of S. 1511 and not the provisions of H.R. 1720.

The organizations I refer to include these: ACORN; AFSCME; American Civil Liberties Union; American Friends Service Committee; Catholic Charities; United Church of Christ, Office for Church in Society; U.S. Catholic Conference; Women's Economic Agenda Project of California; Women's Equity Action League; and the YWCA. The list goes on and on. Numerous organizations have recognized that some reform might be useful, that some changing of the Social Security Act would be in order. Reluctantly, they went along with H.R. 1720.

They accepted the fact that it did not really live up to the promises of providing more benefits in exchange for accepting more punitive work requriements. They went along with it. They went along with the fact that the child care provisions were not as strong as they wanted them to be. They went along with the fact that the education provisions were not as strong as they wanted them to be. The benefits were far too little. The total amount of money available, even in the House bill, was far too little, but they went along with it. They tried to cooperate.

But now we see a far more regressive bill in S. 1511, and while we are sleeping, while we are off at the Democratic Party Convention, while we are praising the Democratic Party as being the party of the people, the party for justice, all of these abuses are going to be codified, and all of these abuses are going to be, for the first time in 50 years, placed in the Social Security Act. We are going to lose benefits and provisions for assistance that have been available for people for 50 years in a process that goes on without our attention. We must strive in every way possible to avoid the passage of any welfare reform bill in this Congress.

This Congress should not go along with a process which guarantees that the most regressive kind of bill is the only bill we are going to be able to get. With the President pressuring us and insisting he will veto any bill that does not have the most punitive work measures and supporting one with the least amount of money, we are bound to get a bill very close to S. 1511. We should not turn our backs on the people who make up a large constituency of the Democratic Party. We should not turn our backs on the people for whom the Social Security Act was written. People in dire need should not be pushed around and moved toward a new kind of involuntary servitude.
